Joan of Arc's Bell.

In the cathedral church of Notre Dame, Paris, there is a bell which dates from the days of Joan of Arc-"the blessed bell" which sounded the tocsin when the Maid of Orleans appeared in August, 1429, and Paris was besieged by the English. This historic bell, referred to by Vctor Hugo in "Notre Dame de Paris," was given to the cathedral in 1400 by Jean de Montaign. It was refounded in 1686 and then rebaptized under the name of Emmanuel Louise Therese in honor of Louis XIV. and Marie Therese of Austria.-London Globe.

Origin of "Plagiarist." One who appropriates-that is, steals -the literary work of another to use it as his own thought, the child of his own brain, is guilty of plagiarism, as everybody knows, yet few are acquainted with the derivation of the word or know that the plagiarist is literally a child stealer. Among a certain class of criminals in Rome in the time of the earlier Caesars, there existed the damnable custom of stealing children and selling them as slaves. According to Roman law, the child stealers, when detected, received as a part of the penalty for their crime, a severe flogging. As the Latin word laga signifies a strine or lash, the ancient kidnapers were termed "plagiari"-that is, deserving of stripes. So both the crime and the criminals received their names from the castigation inflicted.

The Coup de Monserrat. The history of the sword stroke the Parisian fencers call the "coup de Monserrat" is romantic. The hero of the story was a young Parisian musician engaged to be married to a young lady of Bordeaux. Quarreling with a cousin of his flancee, he got his ears boxed at the Bordeaux club. Ignorant of fencing, he dared not resent the insult and renounced his engagement. But he also took fencing lessons from one Monserrat, a maitre d'armes of Toulouse. Monserrat taught him one trick only, and he practiced it for a year. At the end of that time he returned to the Bordeaux club, slapped his man's face and, being called out, instantly ran his opponent through the body with his cunning
