

THE PRODIGAL JUDGE

By VAUGHAN KESTER
ILLUSTRATIONS BY D. MELVILL

SYNOPSIS.

The scene at the opening of the story is laid in the library of an old worn-out southern plantation, known as the Harmony. The place is to be sold, and its history and that of the owners, the Quintards, is the subject of discussion by Jonathan Crenshaw, a business man, a stranger known as Bladen, and Bob Yancy, a farmer, when Hannibal Wayne Hazard, a mysterious child of the old southern family, makes his appearance. Yancy tells how he adopted the boy, Nathaniel Ferris buys the Harmony, but the Quintards deny any knowledge of the boy. Yancy to keep Hannibal, Captain Murrell, a friend of the Quintards, appears and asks questions about the boy. Trouble at Scratch Hill, when Hannibal is kidnapped by Dave Blount, Captain Murrell's agent. Yancy overtakes Blount, gives him a thrashing and secures the boy. Yancy appears before Squire Balaam, and is discharged with costs for the plaintiff. Betty Malroy, a friend of the Ferrises, has an encounter with Captain Murrell, who forces his attentions on her, and is rescued by Bruce Carrington. Betty sets out for her Tennessee home. Carrington takes the same stage. Yancy and Hannibal disappear, with Murrell on their trail.

CHAPTER VI. (Continued.)

In the tavern the three men were drinking—Murrell with the idea that the more Yancy came under the influence of Slosson's corn whiskey the easier his speculation would be managed. Mr. Yancy on his part believed that if Murrell went to bed reasonably drunk he would sleep late and give him the opportunity he coveted, to quit the tavern unobserved at break of day.

"When yo' get to feelin' like sleep, young boss, Mas'r Slosson he says I show yo' to yo' chamber." It was Slosson's boy Eph.

"Yes, you can show me my chamber," Hannibal said.

Eph secured a tin candle-stick with a half-burnt candle in it and led the way into the passage back of the bar.

They mounted a flight of stairs and passed down a narrow hall. This brought them to the back of the building, and Eph pushed open the door on his right.

"This heah's yo' chamber," he said, and preceding his companion into the room, placed the candle on a chair.

The moon was rising and Hannibal went to the open window and glanced out. For a moment he considered the night, not unaffected by its beauty, then, turning from the window, he moved his bundle and rifle to the foot of the bed, where they would be out of his way, kicked off his trousers, blew out the candle and lay down.

Yancy had become more and more convinced as the evening passed that Murrell was bent on getting him drunk, and suspicion mounted darkly to his brain.

"Have a drink with me!" cried Slosson, giving way to drunken laughter.

"The captain's dropped out, and I 'low it's about time fo' these here festivities to come to an end. I'm thinking some of going to bed myself," said Yancy. He kept his eyes fixed on Murrell. He realized that if the latter could prevent it he was not to leave the bar. He never shifted his glance from Murrell's face. Scowling now, the captain's eyes blazed back their challenge as he thrust his right hand under his coat.

"Fair play—I don't know who you are, but I know what you want!" said Yancy, the light in his frank gray eyes deepening. Murrell laughed and took a forward step. At the same moment Slosson snatched up a heavy club from the back of the bar and dealt Yancy a murderous blow. A single startled cry escaped the Scratch Hiller; he struck out wildly as he lurched toward Murrell, who drew his knife and drove it into his shoulder. Yancy dropped heavily to the floor.

How long the boy slept he never knew, but he awoke with a start and a confused sense of things. It was evidently very late, probably long after midnight—but where was his Uncle Bob?

He sank back on his pillow intent and listening. A chilling terror that gripped him fast and would not let him go, mounted to his brain.

Where was his Uncle Bob? Why didn't he come to bed? Memories of idle tales of men foully dealt with in these lonely taverns flashed through his mind.

He slid from the bed, and for a long moment stood cold and shivering, his every sense on the alert. With infinite caution he got into his trousers and again paused to listen, since he feared his least movement might betray him. Next he secured his pack, and was ready for flight.

Encumbered by his belongings, but with no mind to sacrifice them, he stepped out upon the shed and made his way down the slant of the roof to the eaves. He tossed his bundle to the ground and going down on his knees lowered his rifle, letting the muzzle fall lightly against the side of the shed as it left his hand, then he lay flat on his stomach and, feet first, wriggled out into space. When he could no longer preserve his balance, he gave himself a shove away from the eaves and dropped clear of the building.

As he recovered himself he was sure he heard a door open and close, and threw himself prone on the ground, where the black shadow cast by the tavern hid him. At the same moment two dark figures came from about a corner of the building. He could just distinguish that they carried some heavy burden between them and that they staggered as they moved.

They passed out of sight, and breathless and palsied, Hannibal crept about a corner of the tavern. He must be sure!

Presently he heard a distant sound—a splash—surely it was a splash!—A little later the men came up the lane, to disappear in the direction of the tavern. Hannibal peered after them. His very terror, while they wrenched and tortured him, gave him a desperate kind of courage. As the gloom hid the two men, he started forward again. He reached the end of the cornfield, climbed a fence, and entered a deadening of timber. In the long wet grass he found where the men had dragged their burden.

He reached down and swept his hand to and fro—once—twice—the third time his little palm came away red and discolored.

There was the first pale premonition of dawn in the sky, and as he hurried on the light grew, and the black trunks of trees detached themselves from the white mist that filled the woods and which the dawn made visible. There was light enough for him to see that he was following the trail left by the men. He emerged upon the bank of the Elk river, white like the woods with its ghostly night sweat.

The dull beat of the child's heart quickened as he gazed out on the swift current that was hurrying on with its dreadful secret. Then the full comprehension of his loss seemed to overwhelm him and he was utterly desolate. Sobs shook him, and he dropped on his knees, holding fast to the stock of his rifle.

"Uncle Bob—Uncle Bob, come back! Can't you come back!" he wailed miserably. Presently he staggered to his feet. As he glanced about, he saw almost at his feet a dug-out, made from a single poplar log. It was secured to an overhanging branch by a length of a wild grape-vine. With one last fearful look off across the deadening in the direction of the tavern, he crept down to the water's edge and entered the canoe. In a moment, he had it free from its lashing and the rude craft was bumping along the bank in spite of his best efforts with the paddle. Then a favoring current caught it and swept it out toward the center of the stream.

CHAPTER VII.

On the River.
Betty stood under a dripping umbrella in the midst of a downpour. Just arrived by the four-horse coach

Presently He Heard a Distant Sound—a Splash.

that piled regularly between Washington and Georgetown, she had found the long board platform beside the canal crowded with her fellow passengers. Suddenly she became aware of a tall, familiar figure moving through the crowd. It was Bruce Carrington. At the same moment he saw her, and with a casual air that quite deceived her, approached.

"You're leaving tonight?" he asked. "Yes—Isn't it miserable the way it rains? And why are they so slow—why don't they hurry with that boat?"

"It's in the last lock now," explained Carrington, and gathering up Betty's hand luggage, he helped her aboard.

By the time they had reached Wheeling, Betty had quite parted with whatever superficial prejudice she might have had concerning river-men. This particular one was evidently a very nice river-man, an exception to the rule on which she should continue her journey, and thoughtfully chose the Naiad—a slow boat.

"I haven't a thing to offer her—this is plain madness of mine!" he kept telling himself, and then the expression of his face would become grim and determined. No more of the river for him—he'd get hold of some land and go to raising cotton; that was the way money was made.

Slow as the Naiad was, the days passed much too swiftly for him. When Memphis was reached their friendly intercourse would come to an end. There would be her brother, of whom she had occasionally spoken—he would be pretty certain to have the ideas of his class.

The days, like any other days, dwindled. The end of it all was close at hand. Another twenty-four hours and Carrington reflected there would only be good-by to say.

"We will reach New Madrid tonight," he told her. They were watching the river, under a flood of yellow moonlight.

Carrington, with his back against a stanchion, watched her discontentedly.

"You'll be mighty glad to have this over with, Miss Malroy—" he said at length, with a comprehensive sweep toward the river.

"Yes—shan't you?" and she opened her eyes questioningly.

"No," said Carrington with a short laugh, drawing a chair near hers and sitting down.

Betty, in surprise, gave him a quick look, and then as she glanced away from what she encountered in his eyes. As she looked, suddenly pale points of light appeared on a distant headland.

"Is that New Madrid—Oh, is it, Mr. Carrington?" she cried eagerly. "I reckon so," but he did not alter his position.

"But you're not looking!" "Yes, I am—I'm looking at you. I reckon you'll think me crazy, Miss Malroy—presumptuous and all that—"

The boy saw a man of sixty, whose gross and battered visage told its own story. There was a sparse white frost about his ears; and his eyes, pale blue and prominent, looked out from under beetling brows. He wore a shabby plum-colored coat and tight, drab breeches. About his fat neck was a black stock, with just a suggestion of soiled linen showing above it. His figure was corpulent and unwieldy.

"You don't belong in these parts, do you?" asked the judge, when he had completed his scrutiny.

"No, sir," answered the boy. He glanced off down the road, where lights were visible among the trees. "What town is that?"

"Pleasantville—which is a lie—but I am neither sufficiently drunk nor sufficiently sober to cope with the possibilities your question offers. Have you so much as fifty cents about you?" and the judge's eyes narrowed to a slit above their folds of puffy flesh. Hannibal, keeping his glance fixed on the man's face, fell back a step. "I can't let you go if you are penniless—I can't do that!" cried the judge, with sudden vehemence. "You shall be my guest for the night. They're a pack of thieves at the tavern," he lowered his voice. "I know 'em, for they've plucked me!" He rested a fat hand on the boy's shoulder and drew him gently but firmly into the shanty. With flint and steel he made a light, and presently a candle was sputtering in his hands. He fitted it into the neck of a tall bottle, and as the light flared up the boy glanced about him.

The interior was mean enough, with its rough walls, dirt floor and black, cavernous fireplace. A shake-down bed in one corner of the room was tastefully screened from the public gaze by a tattered quilt.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Peculiar.

"One o' de mos' curious things about a fool," said Uncle Eben, "is de way he'll holler and git mad if you don't let him show off his misfortune."

SNAPSHOTS AT STATE NEWS

All Pennsylvania Gleaned for Items of Interest.

REPORTS ABOUT CROPS GOOD

Farmers Busy in Every Locality—Churches Raising Funds for Many Worthy Objects—Items of Business and Pleasure that Interest.

Drilling to fire quickly, Peter Metzner, Shamokin, forgot his revolver was loaded and shot himself through a hand, the bullet then breaking a leg.

Edward William Matthews, of Dalaestown, York county, has an orchard containing 4500 trees, 2000 of which are bearing.

A vicious dog near Belfast attacked T. F. Hawks, of Easton, and tore one of his legs in a half-dozen places before being beaten off.

William Maury, one of Allentown's best ball players, is suffering with a broken arm, the result of a friendly wrestling match in a camp along the Perkiomen.

Two girls who recently graduated from the Carlisle High School have taken the examination for letter carriers and will seek positions in that town.

Thomas B. Beaver, of Bellefonte, who has been appointed battalion adjutant of the Tenth Regiment, National Guard, is a son of Judge James A. Beaver, former Governor.

Catching by the neck a rattlesnake that struck at her three times, near Hazleton, Emma Pasco, 12 years old, killed the reptile and carried it home in triumph.

Climbing after a nest of young pigeons, Herman Walters, a Dover township, York county boy, fell 20 feet, breaking his left arm and sustaining serious internal injuries.

In the seven anthracite counties of Carbon, Columbia, Dauphin, Lackawanna, Luzerne, Northumberland and Schuylkill there are 91 silk mills, employing 15,255 operatives.

By granting an increase of two cents an hour to 800 laborers, the Pennsylvania Steel Company, Steelton, has ended dissatisfaction which caused several strikes in departments.

A little daughter of Barney Sheeler, of near Sanatoga, was severely burned during a storm when lightning struck the brass top of a parasol she was carrying.

Crawling through a picket fence in the back yard, William Adams Huff, 51-year-old son of Clarence Huff, who resides along the canal at Riegelsville, fell into that stream and was drowned.

William F. Buck, of Hollidaysburg, killed a "champion" weight calf a few days ago. The animal was 34 days old and weighed 171 pounds avoirdupois. It was raised by a Frankstown township farmer.

Found dead in Yellow Breeches Creek, near Lehigh Station, Adam Stein, of Chambersburg, a Cumberland Valley brakeman, is believed to have been killed by falling from a train.

Because a five-year-old daughter was awakened and gave the alarm when a coal oil lamp exploded, and set fire to the home of Mrs. Minnie Barger, at Carlisle, the family was probably saved from burning to death.

A Gettysburg foundry has shipped to the Daughters of the American Revolution of New York city two British cannons captured at Yorktown in 1781. Carriages were made for them at the foundry.

H. Fuller Smith, of Fernwood, was sent to Media jail, in default of $500 bail, on the charge of stealing three watches from Township Commissioner William Shepley, of Upper Darby township.

John Joliet, a Frenchman who lives in West Mead township, Crawford county, always a hard-working and thrifty man, has purchased the Henry Lippert farm in that township. When he came to pay the real estate agent who made the sale, Mr. Joliet had half of the purchase price, $1100, in silver dollars and half-dollars. The shining coins filled a tin bucket, and the weight was considerable.

Ex-District Attorney John M. Rhey, of Carlisle, who has been elected president of the Oratorio Society, was journal clerk of the Senate when the old Capitol burned in 1897 and while the firebrands from the ceiling were dropping about him, he coolly made a record of the motion to adjourn, telling what caused the adjournment.

A bill for a Federal building at Lock Haven, introduced by Congressman W. B. Wilson, has been approved and will be included in a favorable report to Congress in December.

ATTORNEYS.
D. P. FORNEY
ATTORNEY-AT-LAW
BELLEFONTE, PA.
Offices North of Court House.

W. HARRISON WALKER
ATTORNEY-AT-LAW
BELLEFONTE, PA.
No. 19 W. High Street.

All professional business promptly attended to.
A. D. ORTIS Jno. J. Bowers W. D. Selby
LETTIG, BOWEN & BERRY
ATTORNEYS-AT-LAW
KABLE BLOOR
BELLEFONTE, PA.
Accommodate to ORTIS, BOWEN & ORTIS
Consultation in English and German.

N. D. SPANGLER
ATTORNEY-AT-LAW
BELLEFONTE, PA.
Practices in all the courts. Consultation in English and German. Office, Orider's Exchange Building.

CLEMENT DALE
ATTORNEY-AT-LAW
BELLEFONTE, PA.
Office N. W. corner Diamond, two doors from First National Bank.

Penn's Valley Banking Company
CENTRE HALL, PA.
W. B. MINGLE, Cashier.
Receives Deposits . . .
Discounts Notes . . .

60 YEARS' EXPERIENCE
PATENTS
TRADE MARKS
DESIGNS
COPYRIGHTS &c.
Anyone sending a sketch and description may quickly ascertain our opinion free whether an invention is probably patentable. Consultation in strict confidence. Handbook on Patents sent free. Oldest agency for securing patents. Patents taken through Mann & Co. without special notice, without charge, in the Scientific American.
A handsomely illustrated weekly. Largest circulation of any scientific journal. Terms, $5 a year; four months, $2. Sold by all newsdealers.
MUNN & Co., 361 Broadway, New York
210 P. St., Washington, D. C.

Jno. F. Gray & Son
(Successors to GRANT & HOOPER)
Control Sixteen of the Largest Fire and Life Insurance Companies in the World. . . .
THE BEST IS THE CHEAPEST
No Mutual
No Amassment
Before insuring your life see the contract of THE HOME which in case of death, between the tenth and twentieth years returns all premiums paid in addition to the face of the policy.
Money to Loan on First Mortgage
Office in Orider's Store Building
BELLEFONTE, PA.
Telephone Connection

MARBLE AND GRANITE MONUMENTS.

H. O. STROHMEIER,
CENTRE HALL, PENN.
Manufacturer of and Dealer in
HIGH GRADE . . .
MONUMENTAL WORK
In all kinds of Marble and
Granite. Don't fail to get my price.

BOALSBURG TAVERN
BOALSBURG, PA.
AMOS KOCH, PROPRIETOR
This well-known hostelry is prepared to accommodate all travelers. Bus and road from all trains stopping at Oak Hill Station. Every effort is made to accommodate the traveling public. Lawyers attached.

OLD FORT HOTEL
EDWARD ROYER
Proprietor
Location: One mile South of Centre Hall.
Accommodations free-class. Parties wishing to enjoy an evening given special attention. Meals for such occasions prepared on short notice. Always prepared for the transient trade.

DR. SOL. M. NISSLEY,
VETERINARY SURGEON.

A graduate of the University of Pennsylvania. Office at Palace Livery Stable, Bellefonte, Pa. Both 'phones.
Oct. 1, 1917.