Of course, had T. R. received the extra $150,000 he demanded from Standard Oil, he would have purified it before using it for the hallowed cause of electing him president.

The hundred thousand the Standard Oil crowd contributed in 1904 made enough noise when it fell into the till to attract T. R.'s attention. It appears from Archibald's statements Standard Oil did not make its contributions to campaign funds without a guarantee that the candidates would be informed of their gifts. They gave to receive in return.
