they left an awful trail of dead and dying on the field." Another encounter is thus described:

"The Turks made a prolonged sally to the northeast, fighting what was almost a pitched battle in trying to relieve the pressure of the Bulgarian forces. The Turks hurried onward at first with great hardihood, their field guns searching the hillsides and crests with shrapnel, while the infantry fired tremendous volleys with rifles. The Turkish infantry's assault was further supported by Maxims and pompoms.

"The Bulgarians, who were busily constructing siege batteries in that vicinity, paid relatively little attention to the advancing, noisy Turks. Very soon, however, batallions ran forward at the double quick and soon stopped the Turks' attempt to gain the summit of the hills. Perhaps the Turks Go On-King Nicholas Gives Curt also had an intention of trying to recover their lost ground by the junction of the Arda and Maritza rivers, but they lacked strength and courage for that herculean task.

"Instead, I saw gallant Bulgarian reservists clambering and bounding up the Ministers of the great powers. the shoulder of the hill by Maritza like goats. Lawyer, However, Qualified Admission With a Remark That Had Unkind Sound.

The jury was hearing the closing arguments in a damage suit before Judge Ben M. Smith, in which slander was alleged. The attorney for the plaintiff had been directing his broadsides against the defendant for his show of ingratitude, when the latter's counsel objected.

"Gratitude is inspiring but is not a constitutional requirement," interposed the objector, who had borrowed several law books from the other lawyer some time before.

"One look as your face convinces me that you are right," said the first lawyer, "If gratitude were a constitutional requirement you couldn't be a citizen." -Chicago Evening Post.

energy, with a view of forcing the Turkish troops away from Constantinople. It is also appounced that the Bulgarians have occupied the town of Hademkeni, 21 miles from Constantinople

If this is true, it is a very important capture, as that town is Nazim Pasha's staff headquarters.

With the Turkish armies beaten in every battle during the month's war and now behind the fortifications at Tchatalja defending the capital of the empire, the appeal of the Ottoman Government to Bulgaria for an armistice pending the opening of negotiations for peace does not come as a surprise.

What terms, if any, Turkey has proposed has not been disclosed. They must, however, in the opinion of diplomats, be unlimited if they are to prove acceptable to Bulgaria.

"The Buigarians determined upon further bayonet charges and directed their attention upon North and West Chair Tepe and other works marked for assault. Storming battalions who first attended divine worship stripped off and piled their superfluous coats and baggage in the trenches, and made ready with, linesmon and reservists in common for the furious charge.

"Then the Turks precipitated things by attempting to make another sally to the west and south. Then an inferno broke loose. The Turks came on, not knowing what was in store for them. Lines of their levies advanced, anxious to regain the ground, particularly by Marash. They first raked the Bulgarian lines with artillery and then with rifle fire, which raged continuously.

"Bulgaria was ready. When the troops were upon leash her gunners fired in all directions. Under perfect control, a tornado of artillery must have appalled as well as smitten and devastated the lost Turks, though they struggled with hopeless frenzy. The Bulgarian gunners bore down all appearance even of Turkish opposition, but still the bombardment continued riotously. The Turks hurried to their bomb-proofs and the safest quarters. "It was then about 10 o'clock at night. The Bulgarian infantry ran in with bayonets fixed, and there was wild, terrible work, and no wish to ask for or to give quarter. Here were men whose homes and offspring had been harrowed by scenes of blood and
