PAINFUL, TRYING DISEASE OF CABBAGE HOOK IS HANDY FOR HARNESS

Infected Plants Show Tendency to Wilt on Sunny Days.

Club Root is Spread From Field to Field by Being Carried on Cultivators and Feet of Horses-Rotation is Suggested.

(By H. S. REED, Virginia.) When a field is badly infected with disease it may appear at the seedling stage, as a dwarfing of the young plants, but the fields are not usually badly enough infected the first season to manifest the disease until the cabbage is half grown. In districts where the disease has just begun to get a foothold, the grower is not likely to notice any trouble, therefore, until after the first of July. At about that time it will be noticed that the plants which are being infected show a tendency to wilt on bright sunny days. although at night they may recover and do not wilt on the following day unless it is again bright and warm. Such plants may succeed in making enough growth to produce a salable cabbage, although it is somewhat undersized and slightly loose. The earlier the plant is infected with the disease, the smaller is the head produced.

The agent responsible for the club root disease is an organism belonging to the lowest orders of plant life, which lives as a parasite upon the roots of cabbage and related plants, like cauliflower, rutabagas, flat turnips, mustard, etc. As the plant and its parasite reaches maturity the latter ceases active growth and begins the formation of spores which are capable of retaining their vitality through the winter and propagating the disease. The decay of the cabbage root accomplished by bacteria and other forms of life, sets free these spores in the soil, and there they remain until the following spring, when conditions are hook, on the other hand where the again favorable for growth, these spores germinate, giving rise to an again infecting a plant. In this way the cause of the disease perpetuates itself in the soil and each year injures the cabbage which is planted there.

The disease is spread from field to field by being carried on cultivators is the more valuable. It can be fed and the feet of horses, soil erosion, any quantity, as the birds will not eat and by throwing diseased cabbages to stock on pasture. Guard carefully against introducing any material into a field which may carry the germs of long it loses its effectiveness to a the club root from diseased fields, and especially against diseased soil and diseased cabbage plants.

Practice crop rotations which will allow at least three years between the condition of the patients. crops of cabbage, rutabagas or turnips. Apply stable manure to the crop the cabbage crop. If acid phosphate is used the same rule would hold. Lime will more successfully counteract the club root disease than other substances. Apply it at the rate of 100 bushels or more per acre, one or two years previous to planting the cab-

Almost Any Tough Wood Limb Will Answer Purpose-Prong Should Not Stand Out Straight.

(By J. WESLEY GRIFFIN.) For 20 or more years, I have hung the bridles and halters on a hook similar to the one described in this article. It was made of an elm limb. The limb was two feet long and the prong that formed the hook was about 16 inches long. The main part of the limb was split through the center in such a position as to make the side prong set at right angles with the post that it was nailed to. Almost any tough wood limb will answer, but that of the basswood, poplar, chestnut or any variety that splits easily, should be avoided. In selecting the limbs, see that the prong does not set up at too great a degree, nor should it stand too straight out from the main limb. In the first instance, there is not the room sufficient and the weight of a set of harness will be likely to split off the hook stands out too straight it will eventually give down, especially where active organism which is capable of the weight comes on it near the outer

TROUBLES OF YOUNG CHICKS

While this trouble develops both with hens and brooders, it is more prevalent in the latter. Once this bowel trouble develops it spreads very rapidly.

Doctoring chickens of any age is a hard proposition. With young chicks it is practically impossible to do anything for them with any of the recognized remedies used by poultry men. For bowel trouble in little chicks there is nothing better than freshly burned charcoal. It is pulverized daily, rolled into a dust and mixed with the rations given the chicks. It is a corrective rather than a medicine. Its value is well known in treating A Well-Developed Case of Club Root. stomach and digestive disorders in the human body. Its effect is even more
