Mrs. Drusilia Christina Wieland Hess died at her home at Linden Hall on Friday night at 10:30 o'clock Early in April ehe was stricken with apoplexy, and the latter part of May she fell and received injuries from which she never recovered. She would have attained the eighty-fourth year of her age had she lived until October 10th, and up to last spring she was quite active, but her physical strength was too much reduced by age to withstand the shock of a fall and recover from the effects of a paralytic stroke.

Interment was made on Monday morning in the Boalsburg cemetery. church for many years, and it was her | Boal, in Bellefonte. pastor, Rev. J. I. Stonecypher, who officiated at the funeral.

Mrs. Hess was one of eleven childrer-seven daughters and four sonsof Michael Wieland, who came to Linden Hall and settled on the F. E Wieland farm, more than a hundred years ago. After her marriage to Daniel Hess, about fifty-five years ago, Hail. the couple began housek eping at Spring Mills, and after a residence there of two years, they located at Linden Hall, both living there until their death. The husband died about ten years ago.

Three children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Heas. One son died at the age of eleven years, and Edward, father of Mrs. George M. Hall, after attaining manhood ; Mrs. C. T. Heims of Osceols Mills being the only surviving member of the family.

Jacob M. Kepler died at his home near Pine Grove Mills at the advanced age of eighty years, four months and fifteen days. He was born on the Kepler homestead where he died, and was the son of Jacob M. and Katharine Musser Kepler. He began life as a school teacher, and in 1859 engaged in the hotel business in Philipsburg. Later he became interested in the oil business in Venango county, at Petrolium Centre, and then in the lumber business In 1880 he ventured into the newspaper world, and established the Forest National Democrat, and conducted it until 1892 when he suspended its publication. It was then he returned to Pine Grove Mills and purchased the old home, and since came into possession of two other farms and a large tract of mountain land.

An Appalachian Door.

Any one of tact and common sense can go as he pleases through the darkest corner of Appalachia without being molested, says a writer in Outing. Tact, however, implies the will and the insight to put yourself truly in the other man's place. Imagine yourself born, bred, circumstanced like him. It implies also the courtesy of doing as you would be done by if you were in that fellow's shoes-no arrogance, no condescension, but man to man on a footing of equal manliness.

And there are "manners" in the rudest community-customs and rules of conduct that it is well to learn before one goes far afield. For example, when you stop at a mountain cabin if no dogs sound an alarm do not walk up to the door and knock. You are expected to call out "Hello!" until some one comes out to inspect you. None but the most intimate neighbors neglect this usage, and there is mighty good reason back of it in a land where the path to one's door may be a warpath .- New York Herald.

Lured to Destruction.

The inhabitants of the Scilly islands in the old days looked upon the occurrence of a wreck as a blessing of providence, and stories are extant about thanks being offered for a wreck in various parts of the country. Some of the stories told us by the islanders themselves, says Country Life, show that there was an almost diabolical cleverness in the way in which the storm tossed mariner was lured to destruction. For example, it was common to burn false lights, that were calculated to bring the ships on the rocks instead of warning them away, and worse, even, than this was brewing, fastened a bright light to the horns of a cow and sent her to graze along the cliffs, to the bewilderment and deception of the sallors. Needless to say, this spirit has entirely changed now.

Curious Beliefs That Hovered Round the Ancient Weapon.

Countless legends and superstitions save attached to the sword since the lays when fighting was the principal occupation of life. So highly was the sword esteemed that Mohammed in the Koran declared it to be "the key to heaven and hell." The warrior or knight gave a name to his sword. He vowed at the altar never to draw it in a false cause. It was his companion and friend and descended from father to son for many generations. One sword named "Brother of the Lightning" had a golden hilt inscribed with magic words. In times of peace these were said to be illegible, but before a battle "they glowed red as blood."

It was believed, moreover, that a sword after long use acquired a life of its own. Many famous swords were said to utter cries before battle, and after a weapon had killed five score men it became blood hungry and leaped from its scabbard at the approach of a foe. Certain swords were said to refuse to give a wound in a bad cause. Among these was the brand Excalibur, which was given to King Arthur by a fairy and which Richard Coeur de Lion professed to own.

In the east superstitious reverence is still paid to the sword. The Daimios of Japan, when they voluntarily surrendered their rank, kept as a rule the wonderful blades which had been handed down from generation to generation, in some cases for more than a thousand years, and which had absorbed, as they believed, some of the character and life of the men that had owned them .- Harper's Weekly.

Heart Burials.

The burial of the heart separate from the body and in another place is an old custom, common in Europe when the heart was supposed to be the center of the affections and the will. Robert Bruce wished his heart to be buried in Jerusalem and intrusted it to his famous friend, "the black Douglas," who was killed before he could fulfill the mission. The hearts of the Hapsburg rulers of Austria are kept in silver caskets in the chapel of the Loretto in Venice, and the hearts of the rulers of Bavaria are similarly preserved apart from the bodies. Luitpold, the late prince regent, ordered, however, that his heart be placed not with the hearts of the other Bavarian rulers, but in its natural place with his own body, beside the body of his wife .-- Youth's Companion.

Verdi Was a Frenchman.

Verdi was a Frenchman, though he always claimed to be an Italian. The great composer of "Aida" was a pative of Ronsole, a village of the old dukedom of Parma, annexed by the great Napoleon in 1808 and made over into the French department of Taro. Taro was still French in 1813, when Verdi was born. Therefore, though born on Italian soil, Verdi was legally, a Frenchman by birth.-Boston Post.

She Raised All Her Fresh Vegetables. "My wife raises all her fresh vegetables," remarked the professional funny man as he helped his guest to string beans and tiny young beets. As the apartment was on the top floor of a high building, the guest had visions of hotbeds and greenhouses on the roof. No window boxes producing fresh vegetables were in evidence, and the matter of fact guest was speculating as to the agricultural methods of the funny man's wife when the buzz of the dumbwaiter called her from the table. "More fresh vegetables?" queried the funny man as she resumed her seat at the table. "Yes," she responded wearly. "You see," she explained, "we're up so high that the market boy never sends the dumbwaiter high enough. It stops about two-thirds of the way. If I don't raise all we eat the people on the fifth floor'd get it, I'm afraid. That's John's 'raising my own vegetables' joke, but it really isn't much of a joke, after all!"-New York Times.

Echo Verses.

On the occasion of Louis Kossuth's visit to St. Andrews a public dinner was given in his honor, and Willie applied for a ticket to the bailie who was in charge of the arrangements. The worthy man curtly refused the application, saying to Willie that it was "no place for the likes of him to be at the dinner."

"No for the likes of me!" was Willle's indignant rejoinder. "I've been in the company of gentlemen from 11 to 4 o'clock maist days for the last thirty year, and that's mair than you can 8ay."

Blowing Out an Egg.

To blow out an egg make a small hole in each end, bore the holes with a large darning peedle or hatpin, pressing steadily, but not too hard, and twisting the point round and round until a small hole has been punctured; then enlarge the hole slightly with the sharp point of your scissors, being careful not to crack the shell in doing so. Make the hole in the large end of the shell a trifle larger than the one in the small end. Hold the egg over a bowl, put the small end to your lips and blow steadily until all the egg bas rup out of the shell,
