PARTY THOROUGHLY ORGANIZED.

The Democratic party is the only political organization in the state that maintains an active, energetic organization the year around. Democratic State Headquarters at Harrisburg is a busy place six days of every week. Resident Secretary Van Dyke is in constant touch with all the members of the State Committee, and this relationship is extended to the 4,000 precinct committeemen and more than 400,000 voters of the party. The Democratic State Headquarters belongs to them and is financed by them. It's facilities are at their service all the time. Visitors are welcomed and made to feel at home, prompt attention is given to every communication, and the constant effort is to make the Democratic organization of the greatest possible service to the rank and file and thoroughly responsive to their will. Thus the true Democratic spirit is exemplified and its fruits are made manifest by the success of such gatherings of the party clans as York just witnessed in the annual meeting of the State Federation of Democratic Clubs.

PARTY STRENGTH INCREASING.

The Democratic party in Pennsylvania is stronger to-day than it was last November. Thousands of Democrats lured by the Roosevelt will-of-the-wisp last year are back in the ranks, thankful that Teddy failed of election. Thousands of independents who aligned themselves with the Washington Party last year, impressed with the splendid statesmanship of President Wilson and a Democratic Congress and disgusted with the futility of third party efforts, are preparing to take their place under the Democratic banner, where all genuine progressives belong. With other parties disintegrating and torn with factional strife, the Democratic party in Pennsylvania to-day is harmonious, militant and growing.

Feeling a Presence.
Reading a book recently, the writer was arrested by one sentence: "If I went into a room without knowing you to be there I should at once feel your presence." It is the imaginative address from a man to a woman. Most of us possibly have that curious instinct—the reverse of that of the horse that will not rest in a stable that has housed a bear—the instinct that knows the presence of the affinity. There are people—being to the general view excellent citizens—whom you cannot abide. There are people whose presence you detest and resent, and though you could give no particular reason for the antipathy you would rather die suddenly than live in the same street with them. These are usually, I think, relatives of some sort who have the traditional claim to make themselves a nuisance. But haven't you felt the presence of the person you like?—London Chronicle.

Encouraging.
Recently an employee in a business house who had held a clerkship for several years went to the boss with a plea for an increase in salary. "I asked you for a little more salary a year ago," said the clerk, "but you told me that you were not able to give it to me at that time. Now a little lady has come to our home, which will add to the expense, and I would be very glad if you could favorably consider my request."

"I see, I see," thoughtfully replied the boss. "Let me think it over a minute. Boy, I suppose?"

"Yes, sir," happily answered the clerk, greatly encouraged by his employer's attitude.

"I think I can fix it," responded the employer. "I won't be able to give you any more money, but just as soon as the boy gets big enough we will find a position for him in the office here."—Philadelphia Telegraph.

Next to Them.
"I'm sure," said the guest he had unexpectedly brought home to dinner that evening, "that I have put you out."

"Not at all," she replied sweetly; "not at all. We gave you just what we were going to have ourselves—just our ordinary dinner. You know."

"I wish I could believe that, but I still feel that I have put you to a great deal of trouble and annoyance. If so I am sorry that I allowed your husband to persuade me to come."

"I don't want you to feel that way at all. We were delighted to have you with us. We love to have our friends drop in and take pot luck with us."

And when he got outside he looked back at the house and muttered: "Liar! I smelled corned beef and cabbage when I entered that home, and what I got was English mutton chops and green peas."—Detroit Free Press.
