Growth of School of Agriculture.

There is probably no other school in the United States that can show such a remarkable growth in the number of students in the last ten years, as the School of Agriculture at Pennsylvania State College. During that period the number of students multiplied more than fifteen times. The growth has been continuous every year.

For the year 1904-05, the total number of students was 73. The following year it was increased to ninety-four; 1907 03, of 202; 1908-09, of 337; 1909-10, of 479; 1910-11, of 638; 1911-12, of 824; 1912-13, of 968; 1913-14 of 1125.

This remarkable increase in the demand for the benefits of the School of Agriculture is highly creditable both to the institution and to the students who have taken advantage of the facilities it offers for scientific instruction in agriculture. It was largely due to the selfsacrifice and professional enthusiasm of the teaching force, without any special provision for the purpose. Until within the last year or so, the instructors have gone all over the State carrying the benefits of the school to the farmers, Hall, four sixths of all the real estate their sons and daughters, who could not and all her personal property.
