To leave nothing undone to secure a catch of alfalfa on his mountain farm, David L. Geary secured soil from an old alfalfa field on the Reporter's farm with which to inoculate the trial field. Mr. Geary has worked wonders on the mountain farm, and if he succeeds in establishing alfalfa, he will have as productive a farm as those in the valley.

THEY CAN'T COME BACK.

The head lines were set, the buglers were prepared, every organ of Penroseism and special privilege was waiting for the signal to herald the glad news that Foraker, Standard Oil twin of Penrose, had been vindicated. The Independent citizens of Ohio, just over the border from Pennsylvania, had rushed madly back to the citadels of privilege and were clasping to their bosoms the maligned representative of standpatism. And so 'twould be with Pennsylvania and Penrose.

Alas! how the sweet dream faded. It was not so to be. Forakerism in Ohio is still an outcast. Men are not making gods of broken idols in Ohio.

Nor are they in Pennsylvania. The odor of Standard Oil about the Foraker and Penrose candidacies is still too strong to be overcome by the sweet perfume of pleasing promises and plausible excuses. The temporary and empty victory of Penrose in the Pennsylvania primaries was the inspiration and strength of the Foraker campaign in Ohio. The crushing and final defeat of Foraker is but the forerunner of an even more bitter rebuke to his campaign and counterpart in Pennsylvania.

So the head lines must be changed; the bugles laid away, and the editorial heads must be scratched in a desperate search for an explanation of this decisive defeat of the distressed and discredited Old Guard.

Vance McCormick, Democratic candidate for governor, with characteristic directness and simplicity, has already, early in the campaign, laid his finger upon one of the very weak spots in the Republican machine. He is not talking in generalities, but in facts, when he points out the notorious abuses perpetrated by the state senate and the raids which it has permitted upon the public treasury to satisfy its own love of ease and luxury.

When he points out that during the last session of the legislature there were two employes in the senate for every member of the body, and that the ordinary salaries and expenses of that six months' session, outside of printing and other necessary outlays, was $100,000, he has produced a concrete example of the utter recklessness with which the leaders of the Republican organization in the legislature squandered the people's money.

There is no possible answer to his plain statement of the fact that the senate required five sergeants-at-arms and nine doorkeepers, at a total expense of $15,000, to keep the members in order and to watch the four doors.

Nor can any excuse be offered for the fact that thirteen clerks, at $7 a day each, drawing a total of $14,500 during a six months' session, were employed to attend sessions of senate committees which never met.

Nor can the need be shown for three custodians of committee rooms, three custodians of wash rooms, three custodians of the basement, at $6 a day apiece, and drawing more than $6000 during the session, to look after property for which the Board of Public Grounds and Buildings already has vast appropriations to pay permanent and regular watchmen and guards.

The mere fact that useless employes of this one chamber of the legislature drew $55,000 for a half-year's work is significant, not only that it represents one big leak in the public treasury, but also in the fact that it is only symptomatic of the grafts and losses from which the state has suffered in every department of its business for a generation. No one can know how many of the millions collected from the taxpayers have gone for projects just as useless, and perhaps more scandalous, than these padded pay rolls under the direct eye of the Republican leaders.

It is also significant in showing the keen fondness of the machine leaders for placing their personal political satellites upon the pay roll of the state, thereby saving themselves the unpleasant necessity of providing loaves and fishes for their consumption.

It will take a thorough and complete house-cleaning on Capitol Hill to end these long-standing abuses and to stop this constant drain upon the funds collected from the people.
