State to Use Crippled Wild Turkey.

Mention was made in this paper several months ago of a wild turkey which came to the premises of Harry B. Frankeberger below Centre Hall, in a crippled condition, after having been fired upon by some small type of individual who masquerades under the name of sportsman.

Last week Samuel Durst shipped 4400 pounds of pork to Phillipsburg. This netted him a pretty sum and added to his other income from the farm will make the gross receipts from the old farm much above that of many farms containing more acres.

Rev. and Mrs. J. M. Rearick of Williamsburg, and formerly of this place, have just issued announcements of the marriage of their eldest daughter, Miss Jodie Rearick, to William J. Braskamp, which took place in Sioux City, Iowa, September 13th, 1914. It was during her term of public school teaching in that city that Mrs. Braskamp formed the friendship of the man who now owns her as his bride. The announcement came as a pleasant surprise to the many friends of the bride in this place.

A State inspector of public buildings was in Centre Hall on Tuesday and looked over the Penna Valley Banking Company's building and also that of Progress Grange. On the former he recommended that a fire escape be placed and the door leading to the stairway be changed to swing out instead of in. The banking company will make these improvements which have been considered a necessity for some time by the Masonic and Odd Fellow lodges which occupy the third floor. Conditions at the Grange Hall were found to be in such good shape that no recommendations were made by the inspector.

John S. Dale, who holds the appointment of deputy in Centre county in the order of the Patrons of Husbandry, will attend a meeting of Washington Grange on Saturday evening and will assist Master M. B. Fry to confer the third and fourth degrees on a class of eight or ten. With these members added Washington Grange will have an enrollment of about one hundred members. On the 30th, Mr. Dale, with ten or twelve members of Washington Grange, will attend Half Moon Grange, at Stormstown, and assist in installing the officers of that Grange. Mr. Dale's companions on this mission are students in the agricultural department at Penn State, who take a lively interest in Grange work.

3,400-MILE TELEPHONE MESSAGE.

A. G. Bell, Original Inventor, Talks Across Country—Watson, His Early Assistant, at Other End.

NEW YORK, January 25.—Late yesterday afternoon in an office within sight of the Statue of Liberty, Dr. Alexander Graham Bell, the inventor of the telephone, talked over a line, the route of which is 3,400 miles long, to Thomas A. Watson, in San Francisco. This is the first time in history that the voice of man has leaped in a single bound from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and yesterday's conversation between Dr. Bell and Mr. Watson repeats one of the most thrilling incidents of scientific history.

Mr. Watson was Bell's assistant during the long, trying months of his early experiments, and he it was who first heard the sound of a human voice over a wire when, in the basement of a machine shop in Boston, forty years ago, he heard the first crude instrument shape the words "Mr. Watson, come here, I want you," spoken by Bell from a room above.

"Aho! Aho! Can you hear me?" asked Dr. Bell, to-day, and instantly there was a murmur in the receiver audible to everyone in the room. Out in San Francisco in the offices of the Pacific Telephone & Telegraph Company, Thomas A. Watson had heard the voice of his old-time associate signalling in the manner they had employed in their earliest experiments, and had answered: "I can hear perfectly."

Colonel Goethals has made it possible for a ship to pass from the Atlantic to the Pacific in eight hours; Dr. Bell's voice yesterday leaped across the wires from New York to San Francisco in 1-15th of a second. In these days of Zeppelins and aeroplanes and 42-centimeter guns and submarines, the average American has come to accept each new wonder as a matter of course. It is the American way of doing things. We have used the telephone for forty years, and the average American says: "If I can talk a hundred miles over a telephone, why not three thousand?" And so, for years a corps of more than 550 engineers and scientists in the Bell Organization have bent every energy toward the means of protecting and helping onward the tiny voice impulses as they have reached out, mile after mile, to greater and greater distances.

In 1876 the limit was two miles, from Boston to Cambridge, and one had to have pretty sharp ears and a pretty good voice at that; 1884 saw Boston and New York linked; then the 900 miles to Chicago were bridged in '95. One after the other came Omaha, Denver and Salt Lake City. Yesterday the oceans were bridged by the New York wires, and in copper strands Bell and a hundred officials and business men who attended the celebration sent their voices in electrical waves, at the rate of 2,000 per second, from coast to coast.

The celebration was held in the office of Theodore N. Vail, President of the American Telephone & Telegraph Company, at the New York office, and in an office of the Pacific Telephone & Telegraph Company, at San Francisco. Between these two points 150,000 special poles have been erected, carrying two complete circuits of four wires, each 3,400 miles in length. At frequent intervals along this line special coils were introduced to strengthen and hold the tiny current, and almost countless inventions and tricks of the telephone scientists' skill have been used to make the transmission perfect.

At New York, the men who witnessed the demonstration included Mayor Mitchell, other city and state officials, a number of prominent business men; J. J. Carly, the Chief Engineer of the American Telephone & Telegraph Company, who has directed the entire work of planning, building and opening the line; Thomas B. Doonittle, who first invented what is known as "hard-drawn copper wire," and many other telephone officials, while a small group gathered in San Francisco.

In New York the time was about 5 o'clock, while in San Francisco, by reason of the longitudinal difference between the two points, the time was about 2 o'clock.

Adding to the marvel of the talk itself, Theodore N. Vail, the President of the company, was connected to the line from Jekyll Island, off the coast of Florida. When it was found that Mr. Vail could not be connected to the line, the line was arranged so that both he and Dr. Bell, together with other telephone and civic officials, could talk across the country.

At the White House President Wilson spoke into the mouthpiece of his telephone and his voice was whirled across thirteen States to the shores of the Pacific.

From New York the new line sweeps down first to the outskirts of Philadelphia, leaps across the Susquehanna, dips up and down the Alleghenies, zigzags into the muck of Pittsburgh, goes straight on through Ohio and Indiana to the windy City of Chicago, then traverses the plains, crossing Missouri at Omaha, and then it enters the very brink of the Grand Canyon and over the snow-capped peaks of Pueblo and the lofty City of Denver; then it turns northwest to Salt Lake City and dips down through the foothills of the Rockies, past the orange orchards of California and finally crosses the Sacramento River to San Francisco. From the Statue of Liberty to the Golden Gate, at the rate of 56,000 miles a second, infinitely less than the wink of an eye.

Shortly before 5 o'clock a hush fell upon the group of about one hundred men at each end of the line and Mr. Vail, in a room on Jekyll Island, near Jacksonville, Florida, was told that all was ready in New York. It was Dr. Bell's hour of triumph, but it was no less a triumph for the engineers and scientists grouped around him, for it was these who have planned and experimented and built through the years for that hour and for the time to follow.

But the triumph of using the new trans-continental line with instruments as you and I know them to-day, was not enough and there was a strange, crude, box-like contrivance, the original telephone built by Mr. Watson under Dr. Bell's direction. That conversation between New York and San Francisco could be successful over these crude instruments does not mean that the telephone instrument of to-day is no better; on the contrary, the very sight of the crude first telephone showed graphically that the familiar instrument of to-day is vastly improved.

The telephone is the product of a pyramid of inventions which have come since those early telephones were made and it is far more efficient than any apparatus that has ever been produced for transmitting the human voice, and the use of the original instruments on this new trans-continental line shows better than anything else could, how wonderful are the transmission possibilities of that long line.

In addition, the telephones were connected to the line by short pieces of the original copper wire used between Boston and Cambridge for that first famous conversation forty years ago.

In breathless silence, Mr. Bell leaned forward to talk and his smile showed that his mind ran back through the years to that first day. After he had expressed his felicitations and Mr. Watson had congratulated him in turn, the Mayor of New York spoke greetings to the Mayor of San Francisco and one by one most of the men in the room talked over the line for a moment.

While everyone expressed surprise at the distinctness with which one may hear over this long line, it was said that it would not be thrown open for commercial use until certain further details have been completed.

THEODORE N. VAIL, President American Telephone and Telegraph Company.

HEREDITY.

Adherence to Rules Governing Right Living Will Overcome Physical Defects, Says Commissioner of Health.

The influence of heredity upon the mental and physical health of the individual has been a deeply discussed question and one on which there is much to say both pro and con.

Almost every physician who has practiced for any length of time can cite instances of individuals who by rigid adherence to the rules of right living and hygiene have triumphed over serious physical handicaps due to heredity.

If you have an individual weakness, whether inherited or not it is always worth while to try and overcome it. In many cases they can be favorably modified by a continued and faithful effort.

Where the parents have suffered from organic or certain forms of communicable disease children may be unfortunate enough to be physically marred beyond any hope of recovery. Fortunately laws are being enacted to prevent such marriages and stronger than any law is the growing sentiment against these unions to prevent the intensifying of defects. Unfortunately people too often believe them insurmountable.

We are all familiar with the story of how Demosthenes overcame the physical handicaps which seem to threaten his career as an orator.

For many years it was the general belief that tuberculosis was an hereditary disease. It has been demonstrated that this is the rare exception. However, when the parents are suffering from tuberculosis there is always a chance of the direct infection of the children and this led to the belief that the disease was inherited. It is true that the children of tuberculous parents may inherit physical conformations that will reduce their resistance to the tubercle bacillus. Therefore, every effort should be made to develop whatever weakness may be inherited, such as narrow chest, etc.

Care, training and perseverance will work wonders in correcting physical or mental defects whether inherited or the result of individual weakness.

Our Fairy Godmothers. The world, out of fairy books, is chary in furnishing its fairy godmothers, yet most of us have friends at whose touch we become more truly and happily ourselves than at other times. They seem able to endow us, through some magic of their own, with the beautiful vestments and the glass slippers that free the spirit. These are our fairy godmothers. We do well to love them and pay them good heed, for through them we may enter into such possession of the precious gifts that we need have no dread of the striking hour. This, we must suppose, is what Cophetua did for his beggar-maid. At his glance the queen in her blossomed, which later all the world could see.
