

SYNOPSIS. ---6-----

<page-header>

CHAPTER XII-Continued.

The next morning, with Clem as cicerone. Collingeford went over to The Firs to pay his respects to Alix. They found her under the trees. "How do you do?" said Allx. "The Honorable Percy, isn't it?" "What a memory you have for trifles," said Collingeford, laughing. "May I sit down?"

"Do," said Alix. She was perched in the middle of a garden seat. On each side of her were piled various stuffs and all the paraphernalia of the sewing circle. Collingeford sat down before her and stared. Clem had gone off in search of game more to her taste. Allx seemed to him very small. He felt the change in her before he could fix in what it lay. She seemed still and restful in spite of her flying fingers. Spiritually still. Her eyes, glancing at him between stitches, were amused and grave at the same time.

"Doll's clothes?" said Collingeford, waving at a beribboned morsel. "No" sald Alix Collingeford stared a little longer and then he broke out with, "Look here, what have you done with her? Over there, the young Mrs. Lansing

"Gad-abouts," interrupted Alix, "Is just, but cruel."

"Well, butterflies," compromised really happened."

"Oh," said Alix, "It wasn't the baby. Not altogether. You see, Mr. Collingeford, Gerry Lansing-I'm Mrs. Gerry. -disappeared over a year ago-before the baby came. He thought I didn't love him. I might as well tell you about it. I believe in telling things. Mystery is always more dangerous than truth; it gives such a lead to imagination."

So she told him and Collingeford listened, interested. At the end he said nothing. Alix looked at his thoughtful face. "What do you think? Isn't there a chance? Don't you think he's probably-probably allve?"

The judge was not there to hear the meek appeal of faith for comfort. Collingeford met Alix' eyes frankly. "If were you," he said, "I would probably believe as you do. I've met too many dead men in Piccadilly looking uncommonly well ever to say that a man is dead because he's disappeared. Then there's the other side of it. Bodsky says a man is never dead while there's anybody left that loves him." "The judge told me about Bodsky.

his club. He must be worth while, tion of several pompons, waiting I'd like to talk to him."

"I don't suppose," said Collingeford absently, 'that Bodsky has talked to a woman since he killed his mistress." Alix started and looked up from her work. "Don't you think you had better come back-and bring the talk back with you?"

It was Collingeford's turn to start. "I beg your pardon," he said, "You are right, I was in another world. Only you mustn't get a wrong impression. Everybody says it was an accidentexcept Bodsky. He has never said anything.'

1999 51 50 100150 50

THE CENTRE REPORTER. CENTRE HALL, PA.

"You'll never grow old, sir," said J. Y. gripped it. It was their whole farewell.

"Old!" said the captain. "Hub, I grew old before you were born." The captain spoke with pride. He straightened his bullet head and poised a tot of whisky with a steady hand. "What did I tell you?" he said into space. "How's that, sir?"

Alan.

"What did I tell you," repeated the captain swinging around his eyes, "about women?" Alan flushed angrily. He had no retort for the old man. He sat sullenly silent

The captain colored too. "That's right," he said with a surprising touch of choler. "Sulk. Every badly broken colt sulks at the grip of the bit. What you need, young man, is a touch of the whip and you're going to get it." And then the old man revealed a rive. surprising knowledge of words that could lash. At first Alan was indifferent, then amazed, and finally recognized himself beaten at his own game. He came out of that interview thor-Collingeford. "But I never believed it oughly chastened and with an altogether new respect for the old captain. The captain's code was pecultar, to say the least, and held the passionate pilgrim in ample regard but, as he pointed out to Alan, it was a code of honor. It played a game within rules. He further remarked that the hawk was a bird of evil repute but personally he preferred him to the eagle that fouls its own nest. There were other pregnant phrases that hung in Alan's mind for some time and half awakstood. Many a man, propped up by the sustaining atmosphere of a narrow world, has passed merciless judgment on such sins as Alan's-metal, unproved, sitting in judgment over the bar that twists in the flame. But the captain was not one of the world's confident army of the untested. He had roamed the high seas of pleasure as well as the ocean wave. Alan would have struck back at a saint but he took chastisement from the old singer with good grace.

Alan left the captain and presented himself at the downtown offices of J. Υ. Wayne & Co. They were expect-He's the man that said there had been ing him and he was shown in to his lots of murderers he'd like to take to uncle immediately, to the exaspera-

Back in his rooms Alan sat down and wrote to Clem

Dear Clem: We are all two people. Un-cle J. Y. cut his other balf off about thirty years ago and left it behind. The judge has his other half locked up in a closet. He has never let it out at all. And so on, with every one of us. This sounds vory funny to you now but some day when you are grown up you will catch your self looking at you and then you will understand what I mean. I am two people too. The half of me that knows out and loves you and Red Hill and that you love has been away longer than the rest of me. He only got back twenty ninutes ago, and it is too late for him to come and see you because he and the rest of me are off tomorrow on another trip. But he wants you to know that he is awfully sorry to have missed you. Next time I shall bring him with me, I hope, and I'll send him to you the day we ar

There is no stronger proof of man' evolution than his adaptability-his power of attainment through the material at hand, however elementary. From the very beginning, the necessities of his new life called to Gerry's dormant instincts. For the first week he would not hear. The past loosens its tendrils slowly. He was listless and loafed restlessly about the house. ened him to a realization of where he The two darkies worked for his wellbeing, the two white women waited on him hand and foot. At first it was lulling; then it was wearying. He began to wander from the house.

But the week had not been altogether lost. He had gathered desultory but primitive information. Occasional re-occurring words began to be more than mere sounds. The girl's name was Margarita. The wrinkled little woman was her aunt, Dona Maria. The two darkies were lingering relics of slave days. They had been born here. They had gone with emancipation, but they had come back. The name of the plantation was Fazenda Flores. To them it was the world. They had wandered out of it hand in hand with liberty but they had come back because freedom was here. They needed someone to serve. Margarita had long been an orphan. The place was hers and had once been rich. But before her day water had become scarce. The place was uncared for and had fallen into its present ruin. It was well, she said, for if she had been rich suitors would have searched her out long since. She was eighteen,

She had been a woman for years! These things, some of them distinct, some only half-formed impressions, ran in Gerry's head as he wandered over the fazenda. It had once been rich, why was it not rich now? Fertility sprang to his view on every side save

The following day he rooted out two rusty spades from the debris in the old mill, fitted new handles to them and took the old darky. Bonifacio by name, off with him to the depression. They began the long task of digging out the silt of years. Day after day, week after week, they clung to the monotonous work. The darky worked like an automaton. Work in itself to him was nothing beyond the path to food and rest at night. Labor made no demands on courage-it had no end, no goal. But Gerry's labor was diguified by conscious effort. His eyes were not 1. 2. Gamerona in the ditch but on the vision he had seen of what Fazenda Flores might be. He had fixed his errant soul on a goal. The essence of slavery is older than any bonds wrought by man. The white man and the black in the ditch were its parable. The dignity and the shame of labor were side by side, paradoxically yoked to the same task. Margarita and her aunt looked on, and smiled and joy began to settle on the girl. During Gerry's first restless week she had steeled herself each night to the thought that she would wake to find him gone. But now he was taking root. It amused him to dig. Well, let him dig. There was no end to digging. Gerry occasionally varied the work of digging with making some knickknack for the house. The twisted limbs of trees became benches to suppatched and totally inadequate to his weight. In the same way he made the massive frame of a bed and Bonifacio remembered an art and filled in the frame with plaited thongs. Work inspires emulation. The women got out their store of cloth. They made clothes for Gerry and fitted out the new bed. Pillows and mattress were stuffed with dry bur-marigolds that faintly scented the whole room. With each achievement the somber house seemed to take a step toward gayety. Ruin and dilapidation put forth green shoots. The gayety was reflected in the household. They were united in achievement. Quiet smiles were their reward to each other and sometimes a burst of wonder as when Gerry found some old bottles and with the aid of a bit of string cut them into serviceable mugs. Margarita was happy. Her cup was full. All the dreams of her girlhood were fulfilled in Gerry. A silent and strange lover, but a man-such a man as she had dreamed of but never seen. To herself she sang the old songs he should have sung to her and then laughed as he nodded mild approval. One evening he sat on a bench on the veranda, fitting a handle into a dipper made of a cocoanut-shell. Margarita sat on the steps at his feet She leaned back further and further until she sank against his knees. He stooped over her. She threw up het

THE BEST IS THE

Before insuring your life see contract of THE HOME

the contract of THE HOME which in case of death between the tenth and twentieth years en-turns all premiums paid in an dition to the face of the policy.

Monop to Loan on Tipp

Morigage

Office in Order's Stone Building PELLEFONTE, PA.

Telephone Connection

.

CHEAPEST

spice, deviltry, scintillation and wit -blinding. Over here, Mrs. Gerrydemure and industrious. Don't tell me you have gone in for the Quaker pose, but please tell me which is the poseuse: you now or the other one."

Alix laughed. "I'm just me now. minus the deviltry and all that. Come, I'll show you what I've done with

They threaded the trees and came upon a mighty bower, half sun, half shade, where in the midst of a nurse and Clem and many toys a baby was enthroned on a rug. "There you are." anid Alix. "There's my spice, deviltry, scintillation and wit all done into one roly-poly."

"Well, I'm blowed," said Collingeford, advancing cautiously on the young monarch. "Do you want me to -to feel him or say anything about his looks? I'll have to think a minute if you do."

"Booby." said Alix, "come away." But Collingeford seemed fascinated. He squatted on the rug and poked the monarch's ribs. Nurse, mother and Clem flew to the rescue, but to their amazement the monarch did not bellow. He appropriated Collingeford's finger. "I wonder if he'd mind if I called him a 'young 'un,' " solloquized the attacking glant.

"Silly," said Clem, "of course not." "What are you staring at him that way for?" said Alix. "Can a baby make you think? A penny for them." "I was just thinking." said Collingeford gravely, "that a baby is positively the only thing I've never eaten."

A horrified silence greeted his remark. The nurse was the first to recover. She strode forward, gathered up the baby and marched away. Alix and Clem fixed their eyes on Collingeford. He slowly withered and drew back.

Then the judge and Mrs. Lansing introduced. Mrs. Lansing turned to dress was almost too refined. His per-Alix. "Have you asked Mr. Collinge- son was as well cared for as a womasked himself."

"No, mother," said Alix. "I'm afraid we couldn't give Honorable Per- ford's story and wondered. cy anything new to eat. He says-"

"My dear Mrs. Lansing," interrupted Collingeford, "it's all a mistake. I judge followed his erect figure with blue-eyed they look."

"Are you speaking of cabbages?" inquired the judge.

Mrs. Lansing laughed. "I don't wanted to eat him myself."

Collingeford spent a good deal of his sort of thing to gad-abouts-"

Alan Wayne had been away for s year. He had not returned from Montreal but had gone one from there to work in South America and, later, to Africa.

He had been in town for several days when he met the judge one afternoon in November on the avenue.

"Judge," he said without preamble, "what's this I hear about Gerry disappearing."

"It's true," said the judge and added grimly, "he disappeared the day you went to Montreal."

Alan colored and his face turned grave. "I am sorry," he said. "I didn't know it."

"Sorry for what?" asked the judge, but Alan refused the opening and the judge hardly regretted it. They were not in tune and he felt H. His heart was heavy over Alan for his own sake. He had broken what the judge had long reverenced as a charmed circle. He had exiled himself from that which should have been dearer to him than his heart's desire. The judge wondered if he realized it. "You're not going out to Red Hill?" he asked, trying to make the question casual.

Alan glanced at him sharply. What was the judge after? "No," he said after a pause, "I shall not break the communal coma of Red Hill for some time. I'm off again. McDale & Mc-Dale have loaned me to Ellinson's. I've become a sort of poohbah on construction in Africa. They get a premium for lending me."

Alan's speech habitually drawled except for an occasional retort that came studied negation of work, utility, service. The judge thought of Collinge-

They walked in silence for some time and then Alan took his leave. The as another matter of course. Clem white insurgency, his eyes bulged in to any height." talked to the baby. Collingeford to the same old way, and he still puffed For a long minute there was slience.

in the passing gamin.

"Doll's Clothes?" Said Collingeford.

clients. It was the first time that uncle and nephew had been face to face since their memorable interview at Maple House.

J. Y. Wayne was aging. He had lived hard and showed it, but there was no weakness in his age and he met Alan without compromise. He nodded toward a chair but did not offer his hand. When he spoke his voice was low and modulated to the tone of business. "I wanted to see you to tell you that you have overpaid your account with me. The balance has been put to your credit. You can see the cashier about that. I want to tell you, too, that I have made too much money myself to admire a surprising one. This was the gentle slope away capacity in that direction in anyone

"Don't think that I don't appreciate like the crack of a whip. The judge high in his own eyes. But-" and here mme out to them. Collingeford was looked him over curiously. Alan's J. Y.'s eyes left his nephew's expresthe shadows of the room. His voice ford to stay to lunch? The judge has an's. Every detail about him was a took a lower key. "With all your sacrifice to pride you have failed in pride. You have not been proud in the things that count."

J. Y.'s voice fell still lower. His positively loathe eating new things, no solemn eyes. Alan had deteriorated. a great bell on a still night. "Yester- he began to understand many things. matter how delicious and rosy and One cannot be the fly in the amber of day Clem was crying because you had The ruin was a young ruin like himmore than one woman's memory with- not come to the house. I try to think, I out clouding one's own soul, and a Alan, that it's because Clem is there of rejuvenescence. It had been robbed With each pulse of the come-and-ge clouded soul has its peculiar circum- that you have not come. If I could of its talisman and its talisman was a wave rushed through the little "No, bables," said Clem. "He want-ed theat the baby." If ambiency which the clean can feel. Think that..." J. Y.'s eyes came slowly water. Tons of water flowed past it think that..." J. Y.'s eyes came slowly water. Tons of water flowed past it The judge felt it in Alan and winced, back to Alan's face. A dull red was and left it thirsting for drops. Irriga-If Alan did not go to the Hill, the burning there, J. Y. went on, "Shame blame him," she said. "I've often Hill, in certain measure, came to Alan. is a precious thing to a man. Differ- tion. It had been here in this depres-The next afternoon found the captain ent creeds-different circumstancesonce more established in his chair in carry us to various lengths. Ethics week at The Firs. Clem went to see a window at the club with Alan be- are elastic today as never before but, the baby daily as a matter of course side him. The captain had not changed.] as long as shame holds a bit of ground and he went along, as he said himself. His hair was in the same state of in a man's battlefield, he can win back not interested; she did not understand. in rushing surges. Hours passed. Bonk

Alix. He said to her one day. "I've when he talked. His garb was identi- then on a common impulse they both ful. He saw a vision of what Fazenda started to flow back into the river read in books about bables doing this cal and awakened the usual interest arose. Alan's eyes were wide open Flores had once been, what work could Along all its length the ditch held. and moist. He held out his hand and make it sgain,

B

"What's This I Hear About Gerry Disappearing?"

from the river and behind the house. Even here he discovered hummocks in alignment, vague traces of the careful the significance of your wiping out a tilling of another time. He climbed debt which you incurred unwittingly. the slope till he came to a depression I can see that you had to do it be- running parallel to the river. It made cause a Wayne must carry his head a line and beyond that line was desert untamed. Cactus and thorn dotted Its barren soil. Gerry followed the desionless face and looked vaguely into pression down to its end, then turned back and followed it up. It wandered among rocks and hillocks to a natural cleft in the banks of the great river. He climbed a point of rock and gazed around him. Far down to the left gleamed the old plantation house words hung and dropped in the silence in the midst of its waste lands. His of the room like the far-away throb of eye followed the long depression and self. In itself it contained the seeds tion is coeval with the birth of civilizaand the girl were born. He tried to explain to her what once had been, but the long length of the ditch. They she shrugged her shoulders. She was house. Gerry was silent and thought-

"Ah, do not sigh," she walled. 'Laugh! Laugh but once!"

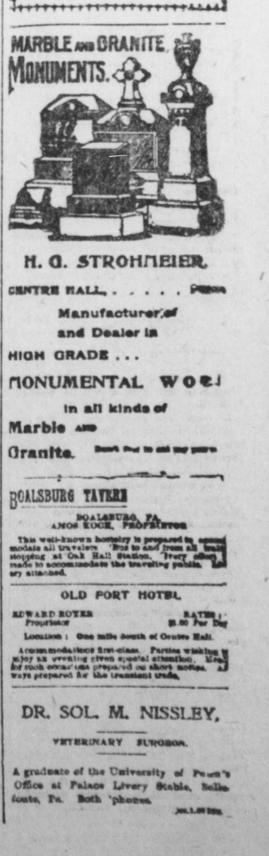

her lips and sighed.

hands and drew him down. He kissed

Gerry did not grudge the months of toll in the ditch. As he worked he thought and planned. This ditch was the very real foundation for the attainment of his vision. Deep and strong and carefully graded it must be before he cleared the sand barrier to the river's surge. The ditch was slow of growth but there was something about it which held his faith. It was rugged and elemental. It was the ugly source of a coming resurrection.

When it was all but done he took Margarita and showed her his handiwork. He pointed out the little sluice ways, each with its primitive gate, a heavy log hinged on a thole-pin with a prop to hold it up and a stone to weight it when down. On the Fagends side were innumerable little trenches that stretched down into the valley. But not until he led her to the cleff in the river gorge and showed her that half an hour's work on the sand bar rler would let the river into the greaf ditch did she understand. And ther she caught his arm and burst into vio lent protest and pleading. "No, no," she cried. "you shall not do it. You shall not let in the river. The river is terrible. You must not play with it It does not understand. You think it will do as you wish but it will not. Oh if you must, please, please play with it below the rapids. There it is kinder It lets one bathe. It lets one wash clothes."

Gerry got over his astonishment and laughed. Then he soothed her, Al ready the simpler phrases of her tongue came easily from his lips. He told her that she was foolish and 4 little coward. She must watch and see how tame the river would be. The next morning Gerry was up early. He was excited. From this day the ditch, the parched slope, the val ley would know thirst no more. With the long dry season even the greet bottoms had begun to wilt. He called Bonifacio and they started off to their

Under direction Bonifacio was dig ging a great hole just at the back of the sand-bank. Gerry measured its capacity and finally called the old darkey out. He jumped down on to the sand-bank himself and dug a smal trench to the water. The river surged through it gently. Gerry climbed out trench, widening it and occasionally carrying away a block of the sand bank into the hole. Gradually, ther in rapid progression, the barrier was sion, lived, and passed away before be leveled. The hole filed with water that rose till it began to trickle down followed the tiny stream. Soon it came Together they walked back to the facio slept, but Gerry had forgotter time. The ditch filled. The water (TO BE CONTINUED.)

PARLER