

EXPENSIVE CLUB HOUSES TO BE ERECTED BELOW COBURN.

Forester Meek Gives Some Interesting Matter Concerning Events in His Ball Week.—Of Interest to Hunters and Fishermen.

From reports gathered from those who are about the woods this time of the year it is found that the fishing is poor and the various kinds of game plenty, except pheasants. The frequent and heavy rains have made the streams very high and muddy and thus poor for trout fishing. However, some of the fishermen report good catches of suckers and eels. The country around Paddy Mountain on the Penn Forest is noted for its fishing and in season there is hardly a day that many city people do not come there for recreation and fishing. No large catches in the main stream—Poe Run—have been reported, though one man got the limit the first day of the season. Frank Kerstetter, who is helping on the topographic survey of this region, and his son, went fishing the other day in one of the streams in this vicinity and succeeded in making a very good catch in a few hours, Mr. Kerstetter getting 35 brook trout and his son 33. They threw many trout back that were undersized.

The first day of bass season opened with a fine rain and few fishermen went out. It does not seem to be commonly known as it should be, that there is good bass fishing in Penns Creek at Welkert, and some bass have even been caught at Paddy Mountain, and it is reported that they are working their way farther west every year. Many of the fishermen from Wilkesbarre, Shamokin and Sunbury come to Cherry Run and to Welkert for bass fishing.

It is really surprising how popular Penns Creek from Cherry Run to Welkert is becoming. At Cherry Run Judge Moser, Judge Whitmer and Senator McConnell have purchased land from Wm. Johnson and have erected fine modern club houses on the site. Ed. Jolly, of Welkert, sold his farm to a party of Pittsburgh men for a club house site and game reserve and they expect to expend $10,000, derived from the sale of the stock to the members, in the improvement of the place and in a modern club house fully equipped with heat and shower bath. The State has leased a site on Welkert Run to a camping party and they have erected a steel club house on the site. David Libby, of Welkert, has erected two club houses on his land which are always in demand. Many more club houses are going up along here and desirable land is for sale. The State has leased two camp sites at Paddy Mountain and the lessees expect to build this summer. Bert Rowe is just completing a fine $2,000 summer cottage at Ingleby. In fact Penns Creek from Coburn to Welkert is getting on the map. Some day we expect to see this one of the popular mountain summer resorts of central Pennsylvania. All we want now is a good State highway from Coburn thru the mountains by way of Paddy Mountain tunnel to Glen Iron, (and some day it will come, too) and then the popularity of this mountain section will be multiplied many times.

The men in the mountains report that game is plenty but very few pheasants have been seen. Harry Wingard, the other day, saw a very small fawn, only a few days old, in Pine Swamp, on the Penn Forest. Many deer have been seen recently. The spring fires and the heavy and continued rains have been very hard on all kinds of birds. There was a great scarcity of pheasants last year and by the looks of things they will be more scarce next year. Rabbits are plenty and, by the way, so are black snakes, the rattlers and the copperheads. The black snakes in particular are quite hard on bird's eggs. There is talk of putting quail on the protected list. That would be one of the finest laws ever passed, as the quail is the best friend the farmer has. The service of the quail to the farmer in keeping down the insects is far, very far, greater than his services as a toothsome morsel to the quail hunter.

Which school will be the first to secure a front line pennant?

When the two and a quarter million Sunday-school workers of Pennsylvania get busy raising funds for the new home of the State Sabbath-school association, "The Power House," will the eleventh district workers help build the first floor or the cupola?

Collecting and shipping magazines and papers seems to be the popular way of raising extra funds for Sunday-schools and societies.

Children's services were unusually interesting and well rendered and the offerings largely help verify this statement.

Schools of the eleventh district show an increase of attendance because the boys and girls are home on vacation and many city people spend the summer months in the country; also, people in rural districts find it easier to attend in summer months.

Over 3,000,000 adults are out side of the church in Pennsylvania. The eleventh district has its full quota. More might be reached through the efforts of Sunday-school teachers and scholars. Make this a matter of prayer coupled with the "win the one next to you" plan.

Over two hundred Pennsylvania Herald subscribers were secured at the Howard convention. Hope many of those were from eleventh district as "Sunday-school reading means Sunday-schools succeeding."—Secretary.

PROUD RECORD AS SOLDIER

Gen. Hunter Has Distinguished Himself Under the British Flag in All Its Recent Wars.

Gen. Sir Archibald Hunter, governor and commander-in-chief of Gibraltar, has a fighting record of which any soldier might well be proud.

Probably his narrowest escape occurred when the ill-fated gunboat El Teb turned turtle at the fifth cataract during the expedition to Khartoum to relieve Gordon. Sir Archibald jumped overboard, but was struck in the side by the bridge rail and narrowly escaped drowning. While he was resting, news was brought to him that the boat, which had drifted thirty miles down stream, was aground on an island, and that a tapping was heard from within her. Instantly he made for the wreck, and throughout twelve hours of cutting-out work sat himself on the keel, hammering to encourage the two poor firemen imprisoned below, who were finally rescued.

Sir Archibald was a member of the expedition which, under Lord Kitchener, finally subdued the Sudan at Omdurman. During this campaign he was his leader's right hand man, and was always to be found where the trouble was thickest. During the South African war he was one of the besieged in Ladysmith, and it was he who planned and carried out the destruction of the mischievous "Long Tom" which was such a serious menace to the little garrison.

When a public reception was proposed in Sir Arthur's honor after the campaign, he refused it in a characteristic sentence. "It is only right," he said, "that I should decline to receive any form of demonstration, as so many of my comrades have been killed."

MIGHT EMULATE THE OSTRICH

Physician Apparently Had Little Fear for the Digestive Powers of His Patient.

"Dick's line of talk on imagination," said Senator Marcus Smith of Arizona to a party of pals a few nights ago, "makes me think of a medical acquaintance of mine.

"Among his patients," continued the senator, "the doctor had a lady who was strong on imagination. In fancy she suffered every ill in the long sick list, and was continually calling at the physician's office or phoning for him.

"Early one evening the doctor was called to the lady's house, and although the fair patient complained of being very ill, she said she intended going to the theater.

"The doctor readily saw that she would be perfectly safe in attending the performance, and was about to take his leave when the patient called him back.

"Oh, doctor," said she to a weak and languid voice, "I want to ask you something. Do you think that I may eat a few oysters tonight on returning from the theater?"

"Yes, madam," replied the physician just a trifle testily as he started for the door, "shells and all."

What Company?

A theatrical manager was told by a train conductor that his ticket was only for twelve people and that fourteen claimed to be members of his company.

"I have only twelve people," said the manager, as he walked through the cars with the conductor to identify them.

"And those two men?" inquired the conductor, pointing to two young fellows who were innocently watching the proceedings.

"They are not my people," denied the manager.

The conductor approached the man with a detective's glint in the eye, and said sternly:

"You said company when I asked for your tickets—now what company do you belong to?"

"Wells Fargo Express company," was the impudent answer, as they quickly brought forth money to pay their fares.

The present prospects for a good harvest is an invitation to the professional sharper to be all the busier among the farmer. He knows he has ability to pay, and that all he needs is his name to a contract—the rest will be easy. Many thousands of dollars are taken out of many communities by schemes presented by strangers that should be bootied off the premises together with the local man who lends his influence by his presence for hire.
