

HEAT FLASHES, DIZZY, NERVOUS

Mrs. Wynn Tells How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Helped Her During Change of Life.

Richmond, Va. — "After taking seven bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I feel like a new woman. I always had a headache during the change of life and was also troubled with other bad feelings common at that time—dizzy spells, nervous feelings and heat flashes. Now I am in better health than I ever was and recommend your remedies to all my friends."—Mrs. LENA WYNN, 2812 E. O Street, Richmond, Va.

While Change of Life is a most critical period of a woman's existence, the annoying symptoms which accompany it may be controlled, and normal health restored by the timely use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Such warning symptoms are a sense of suffocation, hot flashes, headaches, backaches, dread of impending evil, timidity, sounds in the ears, palpitation of the heart, sparks before the eyes, irregularities, constipation, variable appetite, weakness and inquietude, and dizziness.

For these abnormal conditions do not fail to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

England May Adopt Baseball.
Baseball has at last obtained a firm foothold in England and is being played to such an extent in and around London by Canadians whom the war has brought over that a league has been formed among teams drawn from the army pay office and other colonial units, the staffs of the various Canadian military hospitals and munition workers, the New York Times says.

With the football season extending from September 1 to April 30, and cricket occupying the summer months, baseball had never been considered seriously, but since the outbreak of the war, when county cricket was abandoned, the Canadians have succeeded in arousing much enthusiasm in baseball that its future seems assured.

Solomonlike Judgment.
Two brothers inherited a farm and quarreled violently as to its division.

Now there lived in their village a certain shrewd and wise old man, noted for the soundness of his advice. Him the brothers determined to appoint arbitrator. Whatever he said they would abide by.

They laid the matter before him. For a long while he thought, then delivered judgment.

"You," said he, pointing to the elder, "shall divide the farm as you think fair. And you," he continued, pointing to the younger, "shall have the first choice."

Pride is said to go before a fall. Anyway, a woman's pride usually gives way before her tears begin to fall.

WILSON PROGRESSIVES

NOT MISLED BY FLINN-PERKINS HELP TO OLD GUARD

Condemn Quitters Who Now Yield to the "Baneful Influences" Which They Professed to Hate

The sincere Progressives of Pennsylvania who stand for principles and still believe and contend for what they believed and fought for in 1912, will not let Boss William Flinn of Pittsburgh, backed by Roosevelt and George W. Perkins, deliver the other old reactionary bosses who want Hughes in the White House and will offer the glad hand to Flinn as a fopper won to the Republican Presidential candidate when the Oyster Bay Colonel proved himself both bluffer and quitter. When the Pennsylvania Progressives assembled in Harrisburg last week and made preparations for the Chicago national convention, Boss Flinn, as chief engineer of the gathering, was a member of the committee which caused adoption of a resolution expressing firm belief that there can be no co-operation between the Progressive and Republican parties at Chicago if the same baneful influences which split the Republican party asunder in 1912 are again dominant in the convention of 1916. Committee Flinn was understood to include in the "baneful" description the influence of Penrose, who later figured with Smoot, Crane, Barnes and the other Old Guard bosses in the convention which nominated Hughes, while Flinn was a delegate in the convention whose nomination Roosevelt declined.

Indications including the readiness with which Flinn and Perkins joined in the endorsement of Hughes by the majority of the Progressive national committee after Roosevelt had virtually admitted that political power and not principle was the stake at which he had been aiming, suggest that both of those colleagues of the Colonel may have had, early in the game, knowledge of his plans which he did not reveal to the Progressive convention. The Colonel, in his letter to the Progressive national committee, makes clear that as far back as "the opening of the present year," he did not expect to run as a third candidate, as he could forecast nothing but the election of the Republican or the Democratic nominee. It appears from his labored letter that there was no use for the Progressive convention except to shake the big stick over the Republican convention. The unsuspecting Progressives fondly continued to imagine themselves the Army of Armageddon, but the Colonel was only threatening. He would not run to be defeated, and so he is satisfied to join the Old Guard and the "hyphen" element in support of Hughes. Without the Progressives he could not have won any attention from the Old Guard. Even with them his threat to the Republican convention failed, and now he eats crow, and strives to induce the betrayed Progressives to share in the tough dish. Ex-Secretary Bryan, in the "Commoner," writes that "if, last February, he (Roosevelt) had frankly told the Progressives that, while he would willingly be the candidate of a united party, he would not, by being the candidate of one party alone, assume responsibility for a Democratic victory, there would now be neither humiliation to him nor soreness among Progressives toward him."

Wilson's Progressive Support.
Roosevelt is now opposed by an aggressive minority of the Progressive national committee, by many other Progressive leaders in various states who have been outspoken in condemnation of his backdown, and by a rank-and-file anti-Hughes Progressive force of which the unknown strength will, in all probability, develop under the vigorous campaigning directed by Democratic National Committeeman Vance C. McCormick, whose record is one of true progressiveness and won for him, as the Democratic nominee for Governor, two years ago, the endorsement and votes of the Pennsylvania Progressives. The Philadelphia Record saw in it a wide margin of safety for the President.

The work of the Democratic campaigners will be one of aggression, not defense, and will be educational in showing the benefits which the people are deriving and will receive from the accomplishments and aims of the Democratic national administration. Various economic projects of the Progressives have been enacted since Wilson became President. Owing to the similarity between much of the Progressive planning and the Democratic, and to the resentment against the attempt to deliver the Progressives to Hughes, it is believed that in some Northern States there will soon be evidence stronger than signs already apparent, that at least half of them will support Wilson, while in the South, where most of the former Roosevelt followers were Democrats who now join in the unity of their old party, the remnant that may not be included among the supporters of Wilson is very small.

The Democratic state leaders claim that the Progressive Democracy is in control of the Democratic party, which should therefore be aided by all independents who sincerely advocate progressive principles. The proofs of this claim are referred to in the St. Louis convention speeches of Ex-Governor Glynn and Senator James, together with the platform, and will be set forth in the campaign as to make a direct contrast with the evils and shortcomings of Republican leadership. There is no doubt that leading Progressives will help Wilson's candidacy by turning the light upon Hughes, whom the Progressive convention refused to accept, and upon Roosevelt's desertion from the Progressive party. Hughes' apparent effort to show that he is more of an "undiluted American" than the President is will be the target for shots at the connection of his candidacy with the hyphenated element, while the Republican nominee will be challenged with specific queries on "Americanism," as to what Wilson has done that Hughes would not have done, and what the President has carefully avoided doing that the Old Guard-Roosevelt-Perkins-Flinn candidate would have done. The President's antagonists have a hard job ahead to show that the nation should give them control of the government.

LIVE WIRE McCORMICK

President Wilson's Esteem for State Democracy's Leaders.

President Wilson's high esteem for several of the principal leaders of the Democratic state organization who have been conspicuous in the work of the last few years for the strengthening of their party has been manifested in various ways, including the fulfillment of his desire that Vance C. McCormick, the Pennsylvania, whom he styles "a steam engine in boots," should be chairman of the Democratic national committee and direct the present Presidential campaign. Mr. McCormick got into harness and on the job at the national headquarters in New York within a few days after the nomination of Wilson and Marshall. A day or two in advance of the St. Louis convention A. Mitchell Palmer, national committeeman, made known in that city the fact that Mr. McCormick was proposed for the national chairmanship. Mr. Palmer said that Mr. McCormick would be acceptable to Progressives as well as Democrats, as he had long been the champion of principles for which the Progressive party stood, and was its candidate, as well as the nominee of his own party, when he ran for Governor in 1914. He received the highest vote given in the last quarter of a century to a Democrat as a candidate for Governor in Pennsylvania.

To Mr. McCormick is due a large share of the credit for the present gratifying condition of the Democratic party in this state. The enthusiastic and perfectly harmonious session of the new Democratic state committee at the end of May, and the subsequent unity of the representatives of Pennsylvania's Democracy at St. Louis showed that all elements of the party in the state had become firmly cemented together and were confident of the President's re-election. All alike pledged loyalty to Mr. Palmer and the new state chairman, William S. McLean, Jr. Mr. McLean's notable successes as a Democratic leader have been in his own county of Luzerne, but in the state Democratic councils generally he has been an efficient co-worker with his predecessor in the state chairmanship, Roland S. Morris, and with Mr. Palmer. Speaking of President Wilson's regard for Democratic leaders in Pennsylvania, it should be recalled that, early last spring, some of the President's most intimate advisers caused the selection of former Chairman Morris as the presiding officer at the session of the Democratic state chairman of the United States to form plans for the Presidential campaign.

President Wilson has again honored and gratified the Democrats of this state by choosing one of the most notable of their party managers, Mr. McCormick, to take chief command of the fight for the President's re-election. The national committee, in approving this choice, evidently considered itself fortunate in thus acquiring the services of one of Pennsylvania's ablest business men, an astute party manager and champion of clean politics. Until Mr. McCormick was elected national chairman Pennsylvania did not enjoy the distinction of having one of her resident sons at the head of the Democratic national committee since that position was held by the late William F. Harry, who directed the successful national campaign in 1892 for Cleveland. In the newspapers of Pennsylvania and other states there has been copied favorable comment upon the election of Mr. McCormick as national chairman. His untiring energy, firm convictions, unwavering integrity and high ideals, with his pluckiness as a fighter, are recognized on all sides. His waking up of Harrisburg as former mayor of that city, and his membership in the Gale Corporation and, until recently, the Federal Reserve Bank management, are among proofs of his business capacity. He is declared to be "as admirable an executive as he was a football player," which is saying a great deal.

COUNSEL FOR WEDDED FOLK
Little Advice That Possibly May Help to Make Things in Some Degree More Pleasant.

If I were giving counsel to the husband and wife who would make each other happy and hold each other's love I would suggest that neither call the attention of the other to the disagreeable qualities of the family of either.

My husband loves my people as if they were his own," a wife told me. "It makes me feel so happy."

I doubt if he did love her people very dearly, but he overlooked those characteristics which a more selfish man would have resented. If it was what a schoolboy would call a "bluff" it was a gloriously unselfish one.

Most of us can stand the tempers and idiosyncrasies of our own when we alone have to bear them. It is when we see them through the eyes of a third person that they become unendurable. That is perhaps one reason why so few roofs are large enough to cover two families.

If each "in-law" exercised toward the members of the household into which he or she married the same pardoning love that is exercised toward one's own the aspersions cast upon the mother-in-law would die a natural death because they would have nothing on which to feed.—Virginia Terhune Van de Water, in Mother's Magazine.

If a woman is unable to marry a man herself she wants him to marry a friend of hers and make her miserable.

Surely Needed Aid.
One of the benevolent societies of Providence received this letter among several others in the morning mail recently:

"This unfortunate young man is the only son of a widow, who died childless, and his earnings maintained his aged father and two young sisters, whose sole support he is."

The secretary of the society wrote on the margin of the note: "The circumstances of the case are evidently exaggerated."

Count One for Small Boy.
A small boy astride of a donkey was, taking some supplies to an army camp in Texas not long ago, and got there just as a detachment of soldiers, preceded by a band, was marching past. The lad dismounted and held the bride of the donkey tightly in his hand.

"Why are you holding on to your brother so hard?" asked a group of soldiers who were standing near and wanted to tease the country boy.

"I'm afraid he might enlist," said the lad, without batting an eyelash.—Chicago News.

A New Use For This Word

The New Post Toasties are truly entitled to the word "delicious."

They're distinguished by the tiny bubbles found on each flake and they carry the full, rich flavour of choice, white Indian corn—not found in corn flakes of the past.

And unlike common corn flakes, they are not "chaffy" in the package and don't grow mushy in milk or cream.

Note carefully the tiny bubbles—then try a handful dry to test the flavour. In comparison, other corn flakes are as "chaff."
