Save Pennies—Waste Dollars

Some users of printing save pennies by getting inferior work and lose dollars through lack of advertising value in the work they get. Printers as a rule charge very reasonable prices, for none of them get rich although nearly all of them work hard.

Moral: Give your printing to a good printer and save money.

Got Something You Want to Sell?

Most people have a piece of furniture, a farm implement, or something else which they have discarded and which they no longer want.

These things are put in the attic, or stored away in the barn, or left lying about, getting of less and less value each year.

DRESSMAKERS NOT TO BLAME

Patrons Demand the Best France Has to Offer, and They Were Forced to Buy—Expensive Material Used on All Costumes—Much Velvet.

New York.—There has been a host of troubles in the world of dressmaking this autumn. There are many chastened and saddened souls among those who sell feminine apparel. Something happened—nobody yet knows quite what it was—but women did not buy as they should have during the three autumn months. In this city, for instance, where one expects the largest amount of money to be spent on clothes, the buying was held back for so long that numbers of high-class dressmakers and shops sent out additional announcements after the first one and devised several kinds of shows to bring the public.

The delay in buying clothes was laid to infantile paralysis and the election, but, possibly, if the truth were acknowledged, it would be due to the tremendous prices asked for French gowns.

It is true that prosperity was rampant and wages high, but the cost of living was greater than ever before in the history of this country, and it was not the psychological moment for dressmakers to ask enormous prices for apparel.

Forced to Pay High Prices. It is true, they have their own troubles; the American women demand styles that have originated in France, and the dressmakers who went to Paris in August for inspiration and for French models were asked prices that Marie Antoinette and Catherine de Medici would have refused to pay. They felt compelled to pay them, however, and when they came back to this country they tried to get the original price plus the duty.

Evidently, enough American women rebelled to throw the dressmaking world into a state of turmoil and anxiety, and we have arrived at December without settling down with any definite outlay of costumery.

Even counting the struggles of those who are trying to do their best without spending large amounts of money, it is not a winter of economy. Materials are splendid, evening gowns are especially gorgeous and women in general have taken on an oriental sumptuousness in their apparel as soon as they leave the street.

Change in Demand. Up until now, women have gone along with whatever evening clothes they happened to possess, concentrating their attention and finances on the getting together of street clothes. In doing this, the manufacturers have tulle that belonged to last spring, compromises with the new fashion by adding a train of velvet at the waistline or just below the shoulderblades.

It is a very good scheme, this. There is not enough change in the silhouette of evening gowns to cast the ones of last year into outer darkness. Satin is still profusely used, also silk net. The ultra-fashionable line is a straight one from bust to ankles, but a normal waistline, slightly loosened, with a careless grille at or below it, remains in fashion.

Skirts are again short in front for the evening, and the striking difference between then and now lies in the train. As all the new models show this in a detached form, the solution of putting an old gown into new shape is made easy.

Velvet is almost exclusively used for this train, and its lining does not go along one line; every kind of fabric is used, from metallic brocade to platings of silk net; even a deep band of fur is used a quarter of the way up the train to steady it.

Employed in Many Ways.

The woman who has exotic notions does not choose a velvet that matches the rest of the gown in color. She puts a train of king's blue velvet against a slim frock of yellow tulle or she makes a train of Burgundy red edged with ermine against a gown of black tulle and jet. There are black velvet trains lined with white and edged with ermine, caught with ropes of jet over bare shoulders, that hang away from slim frocks of white satin girdled with gold.

There is no attempt to get away from the velvet train, be it short or long, and it is quite evident from its wholesale appearance that it is arranged as often at home as in the dressmakers' salons.

If any one color predominates in velvet it may be red; whatever the shade, a piece of it is inserted in almost every costume. There are few people who can stand the gorgeousness of Japanese red, but even it is found in velvet trains as well as suede girdles on afternoon frocks.

You can see for yourself how quickly an unimportant gown is turned into an important one by the addition of a velvet train. Remember that it should not be long, that it should not be snakelike and that its lining should be important. The problem of fastening it to the gown is not easy, and when one gets to that part of it, it is best to be imitative rather than original.

FOR WORKERS WITH NEEDLE

Most Effective Way of Attaching Lace to Edge of Centerpiece—Use for Old Yokes and Sleeves.

To attach lace to the edge of a centerpiece, roll lace very closely, keeping edge to be sewed on very even. Have a pan of boiling water ready, and dip edge to be sewed on in this water two or three times, being careful not to wet all the lace. Squeeze the water out as dry as possible, then lay away to dry in the roll for a while.

Carefully unroll it on the top of a flat surface letting it unroll in a circle, and then let it dry thoroughly. Be careful not to stretch the edge to be whipped on, and you will find the lace will have a circular edge. Whip on flat without having to pull or gather it.

Cut the yokes and sleeves from old nightgowns and make bodies into protectors for your suits and dresses by sewing the tops together, leaving a small hole for the coat-hanger hook. Cotton dress skirts could be used in the same way.

When the little cloth center or inner side of buttons has either pulled out, or worn, make a network by criss-crossing your threads, in inner part where cloth was to make said part solid; from here then catch threads out to edge of button.

Metal Thread Run in Silk Hosiery.

Silk stockings of black and delicate colors are decorated with fine metal threads run in daring fashion at the sides and in a shadow design on the instep.
