DEATHS.

George Keller, a highly respected citizen of State College, passed away at his home on Tuesday evening at eight o'clock, after having been in an unconscious state since eleven o'clock that morning. He was afflicted with kidney disease and only a few weeks ago returned from the Bellefonte hospital where he had been a patient for some time. He was the proprietor of the Houserville Woolen Mills and a native of Boalsburg, where he was born fifty-seven years ago, being a son of Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Keller, deceased. His wife, nee Catharine Bursy, survives with seven children. Two brothers—Ephraim Keller, of Pleasant Gap, and Dr. Grant Keller, of Warren, Illinois—and one sister, Mrs. Elizabeth Mothersbaugh, of Boalsburg, also survive.

Mr. Keller was a consistent member of the Reformed church at State College. Funeral services will be held on Friday morning at his late home and interment will follow in the Shiloh cemetery, Rev. Horn and Rev. S. C. Stover to conduct the services.

George Ruhl died at the Lock Haven hospital on Sunday, aged sixty years. He was born at Rebersburg, but later in life moved to Clinton county where he was engaged in farming.

Trackwalker Saves Hunter's Life at Paddy Mountain.

On one of the very cold days toward the end of deer season just expired three men, all strangers, who had been hunting on White Mountain opposite Paddy mountain tunnel, not finding any game decided to cross over Penn's Creek in a boat and wait for the train soon due at the tunnel. On the way over the creek one of the men unfortunately fell overboard into the icy waters and got thoroly wet up to the shoulders. His comrades, though encumbered with heavy clothes and suffering from the intense cold, after an heroic effort succeeded in pulling the freezing man into the boat. The rescuers though now very cold and wet themselves rowed madly toward the shore, where their desperate cries for help attracted the attention of the trackwalker, Sam Rider, who was busily engaged in repairing the track at the tunnel. Mr. Rider did not think the call for help so urgent at first and as his work had to be completed before the train was due, he first finished his repair which took several minutes, and then ran down to the creek. In a glance the trackwalker took in the desperate situation. The victim of the accident was suffering intensely from cold and could no longer talk, his clothes were frozen stiff and he stared wildly, while his companions were too frightened or too cold to render aid.

Mr. Rider knew the men had left suit cases at the station and hurried to take the man there. The man's friends, in the meantime, explained that there was a suit of dry underwear and some dry hose besides some other dry articles in the suit cases. Right there in the cold the trackwalker undressed the helpless hunter and with all possible speed put him in dry clothing, and then by rubbing his hands and limbs and walking him about again got his blood into circulation. The train soon came and after flagging it the hunters with much effort and still very cold boarded the warm train and started for home. Mr. Rider, needless to say, deserves much credit for so ably handling such a desperate and urgent situation.
