The Kremlin, perhaps the most famous spot in Russia, stands on Kremlin hill, nearly in the center of Moscow. The mill is roughly triangular in shape and nearly a hundred feet high, though it seems even higher. looming above the city. The walls of the Kremlin circle the hill and the golden domes of the churches within may be seen above them from almost any part of the city.

IS BUILDING OF MANY HUES

Entering the inclosure through the Sunday gate, you find yourself facing two monster bronze figures of aspect disconcertingly fierce. They are images of the two men who drove the Poles from Moscow 300 years ago, and have been gratefully remembered ever since, although their methods were somewhat crude and merciless, as perhaps befitted their time. The average visitor gives small thought to these two bronze figures, however, for at the end of the square beyond them is one of the most startling bits of building that Europe holds.

This is the church of St. Basil, an amazing mixture of every form and color that the imagination of the architect could evolve. It is hard to call it ugly, and it is certainly not beautiful. Every hue of the rainbow is represented on its walls, though rich reds and golds predominate. Every one of its numerous domes and towers is of a lifferent shape and size from its felows. It is a sort of architectural hightmare, and yet it is undeniably effective. It is perhaps the only buildng in the world constructed with a careful view to avoiding all symmetry in color or form.

LAST OF THE CARIB INDIANS

Not More Than One Hundred of Race Which Columbus Found in West Indies Are Still Alive.

The Carib Indian was the first repre-sentative of Lo, the poor red man, to meet the tide of European travel. He was the one found by Columbus and the later Spanish explorers in the West Indies, and he has given the Caribbean sea his name. Thus he is assured a monument, as long as geography shall ast, and he needs it, because as a liv-ing race he has practically disap-peared. How many thousands of Caribs dwelt in the West Indies in 1492 is iurgely a matter of conjecture. They quickly began to die out under the hand of the conqueror, who worked them as shaves and shot them when they made war. Today it is doubtful whether there are 100 pure-blooded Caribs alive. Practically all of them The Carib Indian was the first repre-

Practically all of them live on the British isle of Dominica, on a reservation set apart for them called Salybia.

Six million miles or more on the Atlantic highway without shipwreck is the record of Howard Ernest Hinsley, purser of the American liner St. Louis. Having reached the age of sixty, he gave notice, on the last trip of the vessel, of his determination to retire from the sea. He claims the record of having crossed the Atlantic

The reservation is very difficult of access, for there is no sheltered harbor or landing place. The only method of approach is by one of the coasting steamers which circle the island. When the steamer gets opposite Saybia with anyone who wants to land board, she stops and whistles. If the weather is good and the water smooth mough, a canoe puts out and takes the passenger ashore. If the weather is too rough the passenger must needs content himself to go on around the island and try again on the next round.

Syllables Are Clipped.

But the American does love to save his words! It was in the elevator of a skyscraper the other day that the newest device for clipping syllables was noticed. The lift had just passed the tenth floor when a morose looking man spoke to its conductor. "Three,' said he, meaning, of course, the thirteenth. When he had been left at the floor the bearded man grunted out "five," and the chap next him said hurriedly "seven." So they were deposited at the fifteenth aud seventeenth floors, respectively, and then the elevator boy spoke to the remaining passenger. "What's yours?" he asked. "Nineteen," returned 'that gentleman. "Great smoke, it has been so long since I've heard a 'teen that I hardly understand what you mean," said the elevator boy, but he stopped at nineteen all right .-- Exchange.

Religion of Russia.

Christianity was introduced into Russia in the ninth century. The Established church of Russia, to which the great majority of the inhabitants belong, is identical in doctrine with and is a branch of the Greek church. The liturgy used is the same as that originally used by the church at Constantinople, when Constantinople was the capital of the Eastern Roman em-pire, before the coming of the Turks. This liturgy in the Russian church is, however, not read in Greek, but in the Slavonic language. The official name of the religion in Russia is the Orthodox Catholic faith-the word Catholic being used in its general sense, universal or world-wide. Sixtysix per cent of the Russian people are of this faith, and the census of 1915 showed a population of 182,182,600.

To Know How To Be Ready

To know how to be ready is a great thing. It is a precious faculty that implies forethought, grasp, and decision. To attain it, one must know how to sever, for one cannot untangle everything; one must know how to divide the essential from the minutiae that envelop it; in one word, one must know how to simplify one's duties, one's business, one's life,-Amiel.
