Meriwether Lewis, President Jefferson's Secretary, Had Qualifications Demanded in Fiction.

When a writer comes to the fashioning of a hero usually he wants a tall young man-the ladies love that sort. Meriwether Lewis was a tall young man, goodly in inches and in thews. A hero must have courage, or the ladies will not like him. What hero of fact or fiction ever showed more courage than he did? I question if Christopher Columbus ever needed more courage or ever showed more than Meriwether Lewis. A hero must be a trifle of an elegant also, else the ladies will not like him. Meriwether Lewis was once called "a splendid dandy." He was not only President Thomas Jefferson's business assistant, but his social secretary as well, and arbiter of good form in the early days of Washing-

The ladies like a hero with a past, with a certain air of melancholy about him. No author need imagine these things for Meriwether Lewis-there was mystery and romance in all his life. Dead at thirty-five years of age, he died as he had lived, surrounded still with a very halo of mystery, enveloped in a splendid reticence which shielded him against all the world. That mystery exists even today. The full story of his life has never been told, and may never be told. In short, was a hero, with all the elements of heroism. Of him certainly it might he written that he lived always a gen-tleman unafraid. Officer, gentleman, soldier, statesman, born leader and born loyer--why imagine heroes when such as this exist!-Emerson Hough in Southern Woman's Magazine.

FIJIAN RACE IS DYING OUT

South Sea Islanders No Longer Savages and Cannibal But Humorous, Good-Natured Loafers.

The Fiji islands abound in reputation. To our grandparents they were the last word in barbarism, a simile or anything at once remote and terible, a place where missionaries got stewed-by the cannibals-and clothes vere worn not at all.

The general impression of the South Sea islands as a wild and degenerate part of the world was softened and ilumined by the writings of Mark Twain about Hawaii and by Robert Louis Stevenson's essays from Samoa. But no one wrote anything important about the Fijians, and that is why the slands and people today are so very lifferent from what you would expect o find them.

The Fijians are not only no longer savages and cannibals, but they are fast disappearing altogether. Hindus, ers of the Islands. The flerce Solomon slander ts seen here, too, but is more apt to be hunting your laundry than our head. The Fijian, still distinguished by the frizzled aureole of his hair and the scantiness of his attire, s a humorous, good-natured loafer. His native island is rapidly being taken away from him by more indusrious peoples, and his race is dying out; but these things worry him not at all. He lives by the fish of his rivers and the wild fruit of the jungle, and by the skill of his, wife in pottery and other handicrafts. He has given up cannibalism in deference to popular opinion, it is true, but in other ways he still lives his life much as he pleases, which is more than most of us ever achieve.

Navel Orange From Bahia.

It was from a plantation near Bahia, so far as can be determined, that the budded trees were obtained through which the navel orange wood was introduced into the United States. Several were shipped to the United States department of agriculture. L. F. Mayes, Auct. Trees were grown in the department greenhouses, and others propagated from them were distributed to California and Florida. The variety proved to be unsuited to Florida conditions, but in California it is very productive and highly valued. Almost the entire present planting of the va-Bowersox and Miss mary Bradford riety in that state, according to a writer in the Scientific American, can be traced directly back to two of the trees sent there by the department of agriculture in 1873.

Nation's Defense.

The wealth of a nation must be defended as well as constructed. . . Even if the days of absolute conquest are past, there are yet a thousand employment, having improved in liabilities to violent encroachment on the honor and rights of a people which Mr. and Mrs. James Wert were they cannot be passive under without sacrificing a national spirit and wellment itself. But where lies the strength of a nation's defense? In such things as money purchasesships, fortifications and magazines of wisdom, and high command, attachment to home and bravery.-Horace

Night Owls Are Safe.

A celebrated scientist, who has made a lifelong study of different forms of bacteria, recently made the interesting announcement that there are more microbes in the air at nine o'clock in the morning and at nine o'clock at night than during any other periods of the day. He says that he has also discovered that the percentage of microbes in the atmosphere is less at three o'clock in the morning and at State for service in war. three o'clock in the afternoon than at any other times.
