

NERVOUS PROSTRATION

May be Overcome by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound — This Letter Proves It.

West Philadelphia, Pa. — "During the thirty years I have been married, I have been in bad health and had several attacks of nervous prostration until it seemed as if the organs in my whole body were worn out. I was finally persuaded to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and it made a well woman of me. I can now do all my housework and advise all ailing women to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I will guarantee they will derive great benefit from it." — Mrs. FRANK FITZGERALD, 25 N. 41st Street, West Philadelphia, Pa.

There are thousands of women everywhere in Mrs. Fitzgerald's condition, suffering from nervousness, backache, headaches, and other symptoms of a functional derangement. It was a grateful spirit for health restored which led her to write this letter so that other women may benefit from her experience and find health as she has done.

"For suggestions in regard to your condition write Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass. The result of this 30 years experience is at your service."

What Americans Fight For

Let us proudly remember that in our time the greatest, the grandest, the noblest army of the world fought—not to enslave, but to free; not to destroy, but to save; not simply for themselves, but for others; not for conquest but for conscience; not only for us but for every land and every race.

—From an address by Colonel Robert G. Ingersoll on May 30, 1881.

INSPIRATION TO BOYS IN KHAKI

Country's Defenders Today Learn Lesson From Thin Blue Line.

THE veterans of the Grand Army of the Republic furnish always an inspiring spectacle to the intervening generations. These young men, who so many years ago marched southward to the call of Abraham Lincoln, march again today. Their line is thin. The feet which advanced vigorously to battlefields for the republic are uncertain. The weight of the years drags them down. Backs are bent by the burdens of war and of life. The eyes which once flashed to the call of duty gaze dimly upon a sunlit world.

But the hearts of these heroes in blue—these men who offered the last measure of sacrifice to their country more than half a century ago—are as sound as they had been in the remote period of their youth. They beat as high to the inspiration of the crisis through which the country and the world are living. These men who played a manly part in one of the epics of history decline for the most part to give up their parade, the feature of Memorial day. They are determined to show the younger generation that if their bodies suffered from the ravages of campaigns and of time, the high luster of their courage and their devotion has not been tarnished by the years.

It is fitting that the heroes in blue should give to the soldiers in olive drab this demonstration of their endurance of body and of soul. It is well that the soldiers in olive drab, on the eve of their own great adventure, should salute the heroes in blue whose spiritual descendants they are.

For the cause which the men of the Grand Army of Republic upheld is the same as the cause which the young men of today have rallied to uphold. It is the cause of America, in the sixties as now, the champion of justice and freedom.

Ex-Confederates Draw Pensions.

It will be news to most persons that a great many former Confederate soldiers draw pensions from the government. Some of them were deserters who enlisted in the Union armies; others were prisoners of war who did the same thing. Six regiments of so-called "penitent rebels" were organized by the federal authorities from the prison camps at Point Lookout, Rock Island, Alton, Camp Douglas and Columbus. They took the oath of allegiance, and the men were credited to the quotas of the states they elected to serve.

Right There, It Was!

What a glorious thrill comes to the veteran when he revisits the scenes where, with his comrades, he won imperishable glory.

ON FIELD of VICKSBURG

By Lieut. Col. J. A. Watrous, U.S.A.

WHILE in every rod of the Federal and Confederate lines, from the extreme right to the left, there is a spot of historical interest on the battlefield of Vicksburg, where the chief of the nation's military parks is located, only a few can be given special mention just now.

"Take a good look at the upright siege gun," said Captain Rigby, president of the national commission having in charge the making of the Vicksburg Military park, who was our guide during the two days along the two lines of battle—the Federal and Confederate—and a better could not have been given us, for he lives in Vicksburg and has been on duty there from the beginning of the park. "There, on the ground occupied by the foundation for that cannon monument, Generals Grant and Pemberton stood July 3, 1863, when they talked over the terms of surrender offered by the Union commander."

At that time a considerable tree stood near the spot. Very soon afterward the tree, its limbs, bark and roots were cut into small pieces and on their way North, some by letter, some by express, and some by wounded men sent North. Bits of that tree can be found in thousands of homes—souvenirs of high value. Soon after the war the government erected a plain monument to mark the place of surrender. It was in a fair way to go as the old tree had gone when it was transferred to a slightly point in the National cemetery. When it was at the place of surrender hundreds of visitors chipped off chunks of marble to carry home. Men and women, strange as it may seem, armed themselves with small hammers for use in battering off souvenirs. But it is safe in the cemetery, where the superintendent keeps it in mind and view when the crowds come. Its four white corners resemble a big-toothed saw in an old-time lumber mill.

General Grant said but few words that faraway day, but there was deep meaning in them, and he wouldn't take them back, much as General Pemberton desired that he do so, and that is why, on that never to be forgotten Fourth of July, 29,672 Confederate soldiers, a lieutenant general, several major generals, and many brigadiers, 31,500 stands of arms, over 200 cannon, numerous transports, a great quantity of ammunition, and much other material were surrendered.

As our party fixed their eyes upon the brown cannon we thought of the excitement resulting from the victory—a victory for the civilized world, and an especial and a precious victory for the South, for from that day all possible chance of her setting up a separate government of even a small degree of permanency vanished forever.

Some of the younger editors, Youmans and Glennon among them, remembered, as boys, the wild rejoicing of the North. I remembered the cheers of the Army of the Potomac, right after Gettysburg, when the news of the great Vicksburg surrender was read to the men.

Not far from this cannon monument the two lines of works were so close together that a loud whisper could be heard from one side to the other.

It was a dust-covered, hungry, ragged Confederate who, when the white flag of surrender was displayed, sprang to the top of the breastwork and called out, "Why, dang me if you uns and we uns didn't e'n a most git right on top of each other."

And the brave young Johnny was right about it, strange as it seemed.
