Rehabilitation of Our Soldiers.

The United States Government is not going to be content with merely reducing and rehabilitating its soldiers who have been disabled by wounds and fitting them for useful and gainful occupations; it is not going to leave them to shift for themselves, but will exert an active continuing interest in their welfare.

This does not mean that the Government is to coddle them or treat them as weaklings, but it is going to take an active interest in securing them work; and in other ways endeavor to make up to them the opportunities and advantages they lost by reason of wounds received in fighting their country's battles.

Every Liberty Loan Bond and every War Savings Stamp purchased aids in this work.

"Everything goes on very smoothly," he wrote to George Ticknor after his library had been open six weeks. "The readers average from one to two hundred daily, and they read excellent books, except the young fry, who employ all the hours they are out of school in reading the trashy, as Scott, Cooper, Dickens, Punch and the Illustrated News. Even this is better than spinning street yarns, and as long as they continue perfectly orderly and quiet, as they now are, I shall not object to their amusing themselves with poor books."

Poor books! Then what did a librarian of that day consider good books? Well, the books asked for at the Astor library were Woodhouse's "Astronomy," Frontinus' "Asiatic Researches," Abernathy on diseases of the stomach, Moore's poems, Cuvier's "Animal Kingdom," Goldsmith's works and some others not quite so light. The "right thinking citizen" wanted to read something that would last. But the young fry, who did not know what literature was and were quite devoid of culture, sat down and flittered away the golden hours by reading "Ivanhoe" and "The Spy" and "David Copperfield." And we fancy that as the years went on these lowbrow fry haunted the Astor library waiting for a chance at "A Tale of Two Cities," "Our Mutual Friend" and the other "poor books" which Dickens kept on turning out. Some of these are still observed on the shelves from which Frontinus' "Asiatic Researches" are unaccountably missing.

NAMES OF BRITISH POLICE

They Are Numerous but "Copper," "Peeler" and "Bobby" Those Most Frequently Used.

It would be interesting to have a list of the names by which the British police are known. "Copper," "peeler" and "bobby" are probably the most prevalent, and they carry their derivations with them. An officer who "cops" people is a copper; and the name of the founder of the force, Sir Robert Peel, explains the other two styles. In many parts a policeman is called a "slop," a corruption of "eclop" ("police" spelt backward). In Dundee a policeman is a "shout," the name having originally been got from the fact that he wore a helmet with a bold peak fore and aft. Hotten's Slang Dictionary, published in 1894, makes no mention of "rozzers" or "slops." But how many would recognize the policeman under the name of "cossack," "crusher," "frog," "raw lobster," "M. P." (member of the police), "nam" (probably backslang for "man"), or "Phillistine"? A "beak" is only a magistrate now, but Hotten gives policemen as an alternative meaning. "Blue-bottle" for a policeman is now extinct, but no vehicles are called "policemen" now, as the earlier flies or "bluebottles" sometimes were.

The Zealous Youth.

The Employer—If my wife calls up, say that I have gone out. The Office Boy—Yes, sir; I'll say it every time she calls up.

The Employer—You mustn't do that. My wife would have a poor opinion of your truthfulness.

The Boy—Yes, sir; she has it now. The Employer—What do you mean? The Boy—Why, she called up this morning and asked me if I was the new boy. An' I said, "Yes, ma'am." And she said it was no place for a truthful boy. She said you had no use for a truthful boy. Then she said: "Did you ever tell a lie?" And I said, "No, ma'am."

"And what did she say?" "She said: 'You'll do!'"—Cleveland Plaindealer.

Wanted the Accessories.

He (ardently)—I forget everything but that I love you. She—That's the trouble! you forget to bring me bonbons, bouquets and opera tickets.—Boston Transcript.

Modern Designation.

"Are you a hack writer?" asked the girl who hasn't much tact. "No," replied Mr. Penwiggie. "I couldn't make a living loafing along like a hack. I'm a motor bus."

A Real Conqueror.

"No man is such a conqueror as the man who has defeated himself."—Henry Ward Beecher.

Impossible Advice.

"Be open with your teacher, Willie." "Can't; she shuts me up."

WHEN DICKENS WAS "TRASH"

What the Youngsters of New York City Had to Read in the Year 1854.

A book reviewer, telling of the useful work of John Cotton Dana of the Newark free public library, called attention to the list of authors whose books were most frequently called for in the public libraries a dozen years ago. The list was headed by Marion Crawford, Rosa Nouchette Carey and Alexander Dumas.

An illuminating parallel is found in the first installment of "A History of the New York Public Library," published in that library's July bulletin, remarks a writer in the New York Sun. Joseph Green Cogswell, the New England schoolteacher who became the mentor of John Jacob Astor in the matter of libraries, was almost as curious as Mr. Dana to learn what the public was reading. The Astor library in Lafayette place was opened January 9, 1854, with about 90,000 volumes, and Cogswell watched the public with keen eye.

"Everything goes on very smoothly," he wrote to George Ticknor after his library had been open six weeks. "The readers average from one to two hundred daily, and they read excellent books, except the young fry, who employ all the hours they are out of school in reading the trashy, as Scott, Cooper, Dickens, Punch and the Illustrated News. Even this is better than spinning street yarns, and as long as they continue perfectly orderly and quiet, as they now are, I shall not object to their amusing themselves with poor books."
