

OLD MEN FEEL YOUNG AFTER TAKING TONIC

Baltimore Man, Aged Sixty, Says He Feels Like 30—Spry and Healthy.

SIMPLE HOME TONIC FINE FOR OLD FOLKS

"I was all run down a short time ago. I would work three or four hours and then be forced to go home. Some of my symptoms, in addition to old age, were: Shortness of breath; couldn't eat; pains around my heart; couldn't sleep; felt like a wreck. So finally they induced me to try a couple bottles of Hypo-Cod, which everybody takes when they need a tonic, here in Baltimore. I took two bottles, and what a difference it did make in me. I sleep, eat and feel fine. I am sixty years old, but feel as spry and youthful as a lad of thirty. I work a whole shift and could work overtime if I had to. Hypo-Cod tastes good and works like magic and it doesn't cost much, either," continued Mr. N. Werner, 701 Light St., Baltimore, Md.

As long as an elderly person keeps their strength and vitality they can throw off and keep free of minor stomach, nerve, blood and old age troubles. It is when they become weakened and run down that they feel so bad. The wise thing to do therefore is to fortify, strengthen, tone and build up the system—especially at this time of year—so your system can be immune to aches, pains, etc. Hypo-Cod is the finest, most powerful, nice tasting, reconstructive, strength-building tonic made, according to chemists. Note: We recommend Earle's Hypo-Cod—Read Drug Stores, Baltimore, Md. "The best tonic for old folks."—Advertisement.

Can't Be Told.

"There is no use telling it to the machines any more."
"Why not, silly?"
"Because they go everywhere and see everything."—New York Sun.

BEFORE THE WHITE MEN CAME

Before there was a drug store, or even a white man in America, the Indians compounded, from plants and roots, effective safeguards against constipation. Inefficient Office Boys.
"Where's your office boy, Dave?"
"Fired him Saturday—never did anything but stand around, looking wise."

IN VELVET GOWNS

Persian Printed Chiffon Fabric in Oriental Colors.

The Low-Waist Draped Style is Now Replacing the One-Side Effects.

Evening dresses of the new Persian printed chiffon velvets made in the low-waist draped style are now replacing the one-side effects so much used during the last season, writes a fashion authority in the New York Tribune. The richness of fabric and the beauty of color lend great charm to a dress of this sort. Afternoon dancing dresses of velvet printed in cashmere design are trimmed with bands of topaz crystals. Flame red velvet gowns, both for afternoon dancing and for evening wear, are embroidered in oriental colors.

Apparently no note in color tone is too high to be pleasing this winter. Among the most popular is a brilliant yellow red the color of flame. Dancing frocks in Greek style are made of geranium colored velvet and embroidered in silver beads and silver metal threads.

All tones of mauve still are used. These are particularly good in the bluish mauves such as hydrangea or periwinkle. A beautiful model is of chiffon velvet combined with georgette crepe of the same tone. The georgette is introduced in the form of tiny bands, hand plaited and set in with silver embroidery.

The welcome accorded velvets printed in bright colors is an indication of the way in which the public taste has veered toward more elaborate effects while holding to the simple outline of dress. Metal cloths in plain tones, shot effects and brocaded patterns are great-

FAVORITES AMONG THE FURS

Rage for Black Peltry is in Evidence—Long-Haired Furs Are in Limelight.

This year one or two of our favorite furs have lost just a bit of ground, asserts a fashion correspondent in the Kansas City Star. Take squirrel, for instance. Never were there such soft, lovely dove shadings in anything else, and last year, and the several years before that, the woman who had no trimmings of squirrel about her was the unusual and marked woman. This year the rage for black furs has pushed all other furs aside; hence we reveal in lynx, caracul and other black furs. And it is strange, considering this vogue of black fur, that seal holds so small a place in trimmings. It is a wonderfully becoming fur, but this year's use of it is confined largely to hands on evening coats of gorgeous fabrics and colorings. Even the rabbit's skin is given a more popular place in trimmings, due to the greater popularity of long-haired fur, no doubt.

But for coats, while kolinsky, mole, mink, raccoon, muskrat, and other furs have their following, seal is the supreme favorite, trimmed, of course, in every other fur seen in the market.

While brown and maple sugar and cocoa are the smart season shades, taupe has been gaining ground for the last year and the taupe furs and gray furs, especially fox, are clamoring again for first place.

And so, if your fur box contains pelts that are not so desirable now they will wait. And if it contains pieces that are too small to serve, buy

THE THREE-PIECE KNIT SUIT

Knit wear, used so many seasons strictly for sports apparel, has been utilized this season for afternoon wear and for more formal wear of all kinds. The model is of brown knit silk with blouse of sand color, with collar, cuffs and sash ends trimmed in fox.

ly in vogue. Much beading, embroidery and jewel studding is being done on metal fabrics to embellish these rich but rather unflattering materials.

An extravagance of the season is the bringing of the metal lace or brocade dress into harmony with the velvet evening mantle by introducing a full panel of the tissue of the costume into the wrap. For instance, a gown of metal lace may have a wrap made of a brilliant-hued velvet with a broad back panel of the lace or brocade. When the wrap is open at the front the gown is revealed in the effect of a second panel. This is an attractive idea and gives a feeling of harmony between the gown and the wrap.

OF INTEREST TO WOMEN

Paisley and camel's hair jackets are numerous.

Gauntlet gloves are worn with practically all costume types.

Evening wraps have panel and vestment-like trimmings of brocade.

The Lengen band for evening wear is made of malines to match the hair.

Chipmunk, civet cat and krummer are the novelty furs most often seen.

Small hip-length coats of brown plaid are worn with street frocks of brown velour.

Beaded net tunics in gorgeous colors are worn over sheaths of silk or metal cloth.

Smart tailleurs of fashionable browns have panel linings and pipings in vivid color.

Long gold earrings triangular in shape, made of hammered gold, represent one of the latest novelties.

The lines of a handkerchief, tied around the neck or shoulders, have been adapted not only to day dresses, but one finds it carried out in evening frocks as well.

Hat and Bag Match.
There is a craze in Paris for hats and handbags to match. Needless to say, dress experts are taking the fullest advantage of this new mode, and some delightful sets of this sort are being turned out which make a pleasing addition to what might otherwise be counted plain toilette and street suits.

A little to add to them, not new fur, because the difference will show too readily. But make a raid on your friend's fur box or visit the places that sell used clothing. Oh, of course, if you can buy all new and all handsome furs, why just forget all about this kind of advice, toss it away and throw your money as far as you please.

Novel Headdress.

A novel headdress is designed for the woman or girl who has bobbed hair and no intention of letting it grow long. This is a bandeau of silver wire and brilliants which fits across the back of the head and flares up from it. The hair is brushed straight back from the forehead and its bushy ends drawn through the bandeau so that they flare at the back of the head. Bands of twisted silver or of dainty flower wreaths are shown for the woman who doesn't care for an elaborate headdress.

Graceful Type.
In many instances the sleeves drape on to become parts of the skirt. It is evident that they begin as parts of the blouse, but the surprise comes when their lengths trail on into skirt additions. And perhaps these are the most graceful of all the sleeves, for they have so much sweep of line that their lengths do a very telling "stunt" when they are viewed as a part of the costume complete.

Satin Hats.
Large satin hats, in black and in all shades of brown, are featured in the smart millinery shops. Twisted velvet rosettes or flowers of velvet or silk are frequently the only trimming.

Daddy's Evening Fairy Tale

BY MARY GRAHAM BONNER

ANIMAL HEROES

"I have heard lately of so many animal heroes," said Daddy, "that I think this evening I will tell you about a few."

"I know how much you both love and admire animals, and I know you will want to hear of these."

"Oh, yes, Daddy," said Nancy, "please tell me about them. Animals are wonderful."

"They are. There's no mistake about that," said Nick. "Nancy's right when she says animals are wonderful."

"Then I'll begin with the small pet building, whose name was Pete."

"And before I go any further," Daddy said, "I want to tell you that all these animals had little pieces written about them in the newspapers."

"That, of course, was only right, but you can imagine how proud their masters and mistresses were to have their dear brave pets receive the praise they deserved in the papers. It was very wonderful for them, and they cut out the clippings about their pets. For it was splendid to think that their animals had been so brave that it was news important enough and thrilling enough to go in the newspapers."

"It was right on the first page, too, of every paper—these true stories of the animal heroes I'm going to tell you about."

"As I said, there was Pete. Pete saved two grown-up people and two children."

"A blaze started in the basement of the house. It was a dreadful blaze, and came when the people were sleeping."

"Pete was awakened by the smell of smoke, and before he knew it the firemen arrived, as he had not realized how he had barked."

"He only knew he was trying to do the best and wisest thing and that he must do it quickly."

"Well, after the firemen came, Pete still seemed very much excited. People had rushed from the house, and the firemen were trying to keep the blaze down as much as they could so as not to injure the house any more than need be."

"The firemen spoke of how excellent a thing it was that the people had been able to get out before the fire became so bad."

"And it was the dog who made this possible. He barked so that some one passing noticed and sent in the alarm."

"He's behaving very strangely now," said another fireman.

"And Pete was behaving very strangely. Pete's home was in a boarding house and he had remembered that the people on the top floor had not come downstairs and that they were doubtless sound asleep.

"Queenie, Babe and Albert."

"So he barked and barked, and at last the firemen said to each other: 'Let's see what he wants to do.'"

"So several of them followed Pete as he led them through the dense smoke to the top of the house. In the rooms they found four people sleeping soundly. And just in time they rescued them. For the flames in another few minutes would have been too powerful."

"Pete remembered better than anyone else. I think Pete was a hero, and a very cool-headed, wise, splendid dog. He did more than any person, too!"

"Then there was a collie dog who saved thirty people in a fire."

"They would all have been burned if it had not been for the collie barking his alarm and dragging out those who had already been overcome by smoke."

"He was the second dog here I had to tell you about and the third case of heroism I wanted to speak to you about was this:

"Three elephants, Queenie, Babe and Albert, all belonging to a circus, kept several trains of cars from being destroyed by fire."

"They were all in their winter quarters and a fire started but these splendid, noble elephants pushed almost all of the cars to safety and did not think anything of their bravery and of their splendid work."

"Animal heroes!" said Daddy. "Oh there are so many of them and of dear animal heroes, too!"
