LEGAL KILLING OF DOE DEER NOW TALKED OF.

Bucks Now Getting Very Scarce While Females, Many Hunters Say, Are Nearly as Plentiful as Rabbits.

Discussion over the right and possibilities of legally killing does next deer season began with the opening of the recent deer season. The large number of does during the past three or four years—and the number had greatly increased with the last year—is the reason why the discussion was a big item in the hunting camp conferences the past year. In some sections of the state it was reported that does were almost as numerous as rabbits and hunters in some parties are of the opinion that the state game commission ought to authorize the killing of a certain number of them or else the state legislature ought to pass a law granting the right to slay does.

Three years ago 3300 legal bucks were slain and two years ago over 4500 were killed. The season which closed last month resulted in close to 5500 bucks being killed, according to reports of the game protectors and wardens. Deer in Pennsylvania had reached a very decadent stage about 1900 and grew gradually less in numbers in spite of the fact that the dog law had been enacted which prohibited the running of deer with dogs.

It was seen by sportsmen and game commission officials that something drastic should be done if the deer were to be saved for Pennsylvania hunters. Accordingly the "buck law" was passed in the state and went into effect in 1908. This law prohibited the killing of does and allowed only the slaying of bucks with horns visible above the hair. Recently this buck law was further amended and it was demanded of hunters that the horns be four inches above the hair. Ever since the enactment of the "buck law" the deer increased by leaps and bounds in the state—added of course by the importation of sportsmen from Michigan and Virginia. Sportsmen at first were somewhat peeved over the enactment of the "buck law" but when they saw the great increase in the number of deer readily saw the value of such a law. Now many of them maintain, however, that the does are becoming too numerous, although the bucks are increasing in proportion and it is expected that not a few hunters will be seeking permission to slay does.

Just what the demands of deer hunters in regard to killing of does will remain to be seen. Some are known to be ready to advocate the right to kill two or three does per camp during the last two days of the hunting season. The law now provides that each camp can kill six bucks and three does a season, the bear season closing last year with the end of the deer season. A number of hunters, however, are ready to demand that the law remain as it is at the present time.

When the "buck law" was first suggested by the late Col. C. K. Sober, of Lewisburg, at that time a member of the state game commission and champion all-round shotgun shot of the world, it was scoffed at by sportsmen and even other members of the state game commission did not take kindly to the project. But the wisdom of the law was quickly seen after its enactment. Not alone was the law passed to aid in the increase of deer in the state but it was passed also for the purpose of making deer hunters more careful. If they had to look more carefully to see if a deer when it was jumped was a buck or a doe—the law forbidding the shooting of the latter—they were less likely to mistake a hunter for a deer and as a result of this law the number of hunters killed accidentally in the woods since the law went into effect has been decreased even as the number of hunters increased.

Many deer hunters are of the opinion that the does are too numerous for the bucks and as a result there are many barren does running in the woods. They contend that by killing off a few does by each camp along toward the close of the season the hardness of the deer race in Pennsylvania will be increased. Against this argument the hunters in other camps point to the general increase of both bucks and does and maintain that the increase is approximately what it should be.—Altoona Tribune.

It would appear to the Reporter that the permission to kill does the last two days of the season would be sheer folly. To argue that there are barren does is an admission that there are not enough bucks of mature age. The remedy is to save the young bucks—make the legal buck one that carries three or four prongs. Three years of operation of such a law would make hunting worthwhile. No one could then like now be shamed for killing a baby buck.]
