Thursday morning of last week mercury stood at 6 1/2 degrees above zero. Some time during the night it had dropped to exactly five degrees above. That was probably the coldest March 29 in many years. The day previous (Wednesday) opened with 20 degrees at seven o'clock and at 6:30 on that evening there was a drop to sixteen. There was a gradual shrinking of mercury until some time during the night when five above, as noted here, was reached.

The sale season, which this year extended to this date, is over. In a general way fair prices were paid for all good articles sold. Farm machinery was well bid up owing to the rise of new machinery of this kind. Cows also sold at fair prices—a 199 cow was not unusual. Hogs were in strong demand, especially was that true of shoats weighing from 80 to 150 pounds. These passed at from 12 to 14 cents per pound, depending upon the speed of the bidders. Horses were in rather poor demand. The average horse of farm type sold from 20 to 25 per cent. less than during the past few years.

How the "Broadway Butterfly" learned that "The Wages of Sin is Death." The downward steps which led the pretty child of the tenement along her swift career of wine, dissipation, rich furs and jewels to her lonely grave in the cemetery. UNIVERSITY OF PENNSYLVANIA EXTENSION SERVICE IN MEDICINE

Co-operates With State Medical Society to Help Local Physicians and Surgeons.

Provost Josiah H. Penniman.

Philadelphia, Pa., April 2.—At the request of the Medical Society of the State of Pennsylvania the University of Pennsylvania, through its Graduate School of Medicine, has put into operation an extensive teaching plan by which physicians and surgeons of the entire State are receiving instruction in the latest developments of medicine and surgery. When the State Medical Society made this request, it was pointed out that Pennsylvania, being the pioneer in the establishment of Undergraduate and also Graduate Schools of Medicine, was best fitted to initiate this new movement in medicine.

Dr. George H. Meeker, Dean of the Graduate School of Medicine, is in charge of it. Officials of the State Medical Society, as well as leading physicians and surgeons throughout the State, are co-operating to introduce it into the various counties. As rapidly as the County Medical Associations are learning of this unusual form of service, they are co-operating to the fullest extent.

The plan now being pursued with such success is to arrange a schedule of clinics in the leading hospitals. Distinguished members of the medical faculty visit the hospitals, consult the histories of the most interesting surgical and medical cases, and then with all the local physicians and surgeons as students give clinical demonstrations in which they show the latest and approved methods of treatment. This plan, which the University of Pennsylvania has already demonstrated in many of the State's leading hospitals, frequently with more than one hundred physicians in attendance, is to be widely extended.

In commenting upon the reason for this course, Provost Josiah H. Penniman said that since the University of Pennsylvania had both the first Undergraduate Medical School in this country (founded in 1765), and the first Graduate School of Medicine in America, it ought to be the pioneer. So successful has its work become that physicians and surgeons have been coming to the University from all parts of the United States and foreign countries for postgraduate courses. It was recently visited by delegations from England and France to obtain new ideas for Post-Graduate Medical study in Europe.

In addition to this service, which the University is rendering gratuitously and as a public duty, Pennsylvania is maintaining much other extension work. This includes various stations of the Wharton School in the leading cities of the State. The University has also just held an international conference on Orthodontia, the regulation of the teeth, at which delegates came from all the leading dental schools of the United States, and from Canada, Ireland and England to acquaint themselves with the latest methods in the teaching of this subject. There has also just been concluded a Veterinary Conference for the Eastern States, a two weeks' course in Highway Engineering in co-operation with the State Highway Department of Pennsylvania and neighboring States.

Provost Penniman has also announced that the annual Schoolmen's Week Convention, in the interest of public school education, will be held at the University April 12, 13, 14. It is expected that fully 2500 delegates will be present.

The Summer School, which opens on July 2, announces a new course and demonstration schools in Rural Education, to be under the direction of Thomas S. Bock, who is director of Rural Education for the State of Pennsylvania.
