

MY DAUGHTER WOULD CRY AT EVERYTHING

Nervous and Irritable. By Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Became Entirely Normal

Clinton, Wisconsin.—"My daughter was in a very run-down condition, and was irritable, and would cry at every little thing she was so weak and nervous. As Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound had helped me when I was a girl I gave it to her to build her up, and the results were all that we could wish for. I wish that every mother with growing girls would try for these troubles girls often have. I had taken it myself before my girl was born, and she was one of the nicest babies any one could wish to have. I recommend the Vegetable Compound to women and girls and cannot praise it too highly."—Mrs. L. A. HOLFORD, Box 48, Clinton, Wisconsin.

Mothers can depend upon Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to relieve their daughters of those troubles they so often have. They know from experience the value of the Vegetable Compound in the treatment of these complaints and many, like Mrs. Holford, give it to their daughters.

WEASEL'S WHITE COAT

ONCE upon a time when the Weasel was not as cruel as he is now, there lived a Young Weasel in that part of the country where the snow comes early and does not go away until springtime.

Young Weasel had a very hard time of it in the long winters trying to get food or even run over the snow in the sun, because his chocolate-brown coat could easily be seen by his enemies.

Mr. Fox and Mr. Owl and Mr. Hawk made it very unpleasant for Young Weasel many times, and one day he sat down in the woods to think over his troubles and, if he could, think of a way to make his life easier.

"Now if I had a white coat to go with my white vest," thought Young Weasel, "I could run over the snow without being seen. But how am I to find one?"

His question was answered sooner than he expected, for at that moment Young Weasel saw a queer dwarf-like creature run out of a cave chasing four rats.

"You will eat all of my beautiful colors, will you?" screamed the Dwarf. "I'll find a way to be rid of you pests if I have to borrow an old witch's Luck cat to catch you."

"Colors," thought Young Weasel. "Perhaps he can find a way to give me a white coat if I chase away the rats for him."

Have You This Habit?

JOHN TORTIS

THERE was sharp competition among various contractors throughout the state for the building of the new memorial hall in the capital. The memorial committee had held meetings every day for a week, hearing bids, comparing estimates, investigating credentials, until there were only two principal candidates left. The committee were the solidest citizens of the community, and they had honestly at heart the significance and beauty and usefulness of the new hall.

Mr. James Hare was talking. "Gentlemen, believe me, if that hall isn't finished before winter, and if it isn't one of the sights to make the old state proud, my name isn't James Hare, that's all! Trouble getting labor? That's all crazy Bolshevist talk. You give me this contract, and I'll start work tomorrow—that's what. Trust me, gentlemen, I know what I'm talking about. You want a real handsome memorial; this is no time to hem and haw. Well, I propose to put you up something that'll make the whole country sit up and take notice."

Mr. James Hare mopped his heated brow violently and then, handkerchief in hand, began to gesticulate wildly in the enthusiasm of his oratory. Presently he went out, leaving the table heaped up with plans and blue prints; and, almost before the committee were aware, a quiet gentleman was ushered into the room. It was John Tortis, who had worked his way up from bottom to top in the firm he represented.

What were the ideas of the committee about the memorial, was what John Tortis wanted to know. Before they knew it the committee were speaking at length, one after another. Meanwhile Mr. John Tortis simply put in a word here and there that served to bring out more information from the older men. It was only at the very end of the interview that in a few concise sentences he made his proposition in definite terms, with no promises.

When the fathers of the city were once more alone together they sat in silence for a moment. Then the chairman said: "I am reminded of an old saying of my father's. He taught us when we were children that there is a reason for all things and that the good Lord has given us two eyes and two ears and only one mouth for a purpose. Gentlemen, my trust is in the man whose habit it is to use his eyes and ears twice where he uses his mouth once."

After running a little way the Dwarf came waddling back to his cave, and Young Weasel ran nimbly up to him and said: "If you please, sir, I can help you to be rid of the rats. You need not get the black cat. I am very spry and nimble; watch me jump."

Young Weasel leaped into the air, then he ran like a streak of light under the bushes and, while the Dwarf was peering from under the black hood which he wore over his head to see where he had gone, Young Weasel appeared again at his side.

"You are a quick one," said the Dwarf, pulling his long black cape over his humped shoulders and back. "I believe you can catch those rascals and I will pay you well if you will rid me of their visits, for they are spoiling my work. Soon I shall not have enough colors left to make the trees beautiful in the fall."

It did not take Young Weasel long to prove to the Dwarf that he had not promised something he could not do, for as soon as the rats discovered he was living in the Dwarf's cave, as some of them did to their sorrow, all the others ran off to another part of the country and never came back.

"As soon as the Dwarf was satisfied he was rid of his enemies for good he asked Young Weasel what he could do to repay him for his good work.

"Give me a white coat to wear with my white vest in the winter time," said Young Weasel. "Then I can run over the snow without being seen so easily by my enemies."

It took some time before the Dwarf could make the brown coat white but

"What's in a Name?"

By MILDRED MARSHALL

FACTS about your name; its history; meaning; whence it was derived; significance; your lucky day and lucky jewel

ANNETTE

FRANCE is responsible for the dashing little name Annette, which conjures up visions of a slim, chic creature of flashing eyes and saucy smile. The very sound of the name seems to preclude any relationship with demure Anne, but they have a common origin in the Hebrew word meaning "grace", which the Irish have identified with their native Aine (Joy).

The name from which Annette was evolved was first used in France after a supposed appearance of the good St. Anne to two children at Auray in Brittany, and first gained vogue as a feminine name through the Breton heiress, twice queen of France. Its popularity in court circles insured its widespread usage among all classes in France.

Scotland adopted it in preference to the English name, calling it Annot. It penetrated England without change of form and, curiously enough, in view of Anglo-Saxonic distaste for Gallic names, maintained its original form. Hence, in this country, it is bestowed without reference to its foreign flavor, and is almost never used as a derivative of Anne.

The yellow jaundice is Annette's talismanic gem. It will protect her against lightning and insure her safety in traveling. At the approach of danger or disease it is said to pale in color. Saturday is her lucky day and I her lucky number.

The Why of Superstitions

By H. IRDING KING

DADDY LONGLEGS

HERE are some of the superstitions common in the United States and Canada regarding that spider-like creature generally known as "daddy longlegs." Take him by one leg and say: "Daddy longlegs, tell me where my cows are." He will point in the direction of the cattle with one of his other legs. Wish on a daddy longlegs "for luck." Daddy longlegs brings good luck. It is bad luck to kill him. Say: "Tell me where my love is," and he will point in the required direction. Daddy longlegs gets his reputation from the fact that he is an arachnid; the name being from a Greek word meaning spider and used to designate the class to which both the true spider and daddy longlegs belong. To all intents and purposes daddy longlegs is a spider and a field spider at that, associated with the harvest so that he and his near relations have, for long centuries, been known as "harvestmen" when not spoken of under a more fanciful name. In England he is "harvestman," or "harvest spider," the name daddy longlegs being applied to the crane fly there.

All spiders, according to Pliny, were much regarded by the Romans for purposes of divination and it was considered bad luck to kill one. Daddy longlegs being a field spider, intimately connected with husbandry, is after covering the brown part with something he made from boiling roots and twigs and then making Young Weasel sit in the doorway of the cave in the sun, the longed-for coat was his.

The weasels were satisfied to have their brown coats in summer and their white coats in winter, and from that day all the northern weasels have worn the coats for which their ancestor, Young Weasel, set the style long ago.

Secret Out at Last

The steward of an ocean liner thus explained the "dogwatch" to a passenger: "The dogwatch aboard ship is the split which changes a seaman's duty periods so that he will not be on watch at the same time each day."

"But why do they call it a dogwatch?" the passenger inquired.

"Because it is curtailed," responded the steward.
