TECHNICALLY TRAINED MEN NEEDED IN INDUSTRIES

"White Collar Jobs." Says President of Penn State.

Too many college students throughout the country are preparing thembelief of Dr. John M. Thomas, president of the Penna, State College,

There are not too many young men in colleges today, but too many of those thought of soiling their clothes or hands once they receive a diploma, President Thomas points out.

"The demand for technically trained men in our industries today is far in excess of the supply," says the Penn State executive. "Graduates of our engineering school last spring were each offered from two to seven jobs, and if we had had twice the 200 graduates each of them could have stepped into same with most colleges where technical training courses are given.

"The technically trained college graduate who puts on overalls and rubs shoulders for a year or two with workmen in the mils, mines and factories. is the man destined to industrial leadership by reason of his training and experience. Most of our engineering graduates do this now; but more of the men who go to college where technical courses are offered, should select such courses where possible. There will be need for 250,000 industrial leaders day. with college training in the next ten years; at the present rate colleges will supply only half this number."

One of the common errors of the average man is his haste to take sides without taking time to determine whether he is right or wrong. We are too prone to permit our likes and dislikes for individuals or factions to distort our judgment.
