A Rare Jewel.

There is no relation more sacred than friendship as it carries love with it. The true friend is one not made in a hurry. There is no friend like the one you want birdnesting with in your youth, the pal who has plodded along life's road with you shoulder to shoulder.

When you have a friend who has proven himself such, never let up so long in your gratitude for the kindness he has shown you. Repay him with interest for his good offices, and let your actions toward him ever be a source of pleasure and happiness to him.

Nothing is so much appreciated between friends as gratitude, and nothing will kill friendship so quick as ingratitude. Genuine friendship is such a rare jewel that when you have a positive demonstration of it, let it be your great concern that you will do nothing to mar it, for broken friendship is a source of grief to both friends so long as they live.
