NEW PENN STATE HOTEL

Hostelry Growing in Popularity in Its Fifth Month — Furnished Throughout With Antique Furniture.

Starting last spring as an experiment in home-like hotel-keeping for State College, the Penn State Hotel on East College Avenue is now about to enter its fifth month of existence and its growing popularity among the parents or students, visitors and tourists.

The new project was started to provide clean, comfortable and quiet accommodations that would remind its guests more of their homes than of the usual commercial hotel. It was started in the spirit of Penn State and primarily for the mothers and fathers of students who were in college visiting their sons or daughters.

Another feature of the hotel that receives much commendation of the guests is the old-fashioned furniture. Months were spent by the proprietor in going through Penns Valley, Brush Valley and Sugar Valley for antique furniture of the old Pennsylvania Dutch. The attempt was made to furnish the hotel completely with this old furniture in order to provide something unusual for the many visitors to the town and college.

Among the old furniture in the hotel are several four-poster beds dating back more than one hundred years, and containing the old-fashioned ten-inch springs and mattresses.

The bed covers are all old-fashioned and well preserved family heirlooms dating from 1837 and 1841. There is one rocking chair that was built especially for the stoutest woman in Penns Valley.

Besides the old beds is a chest of drawers of one hundred years of age, and old-time hoop and rag rugs that are real rarities. The hotel contains an old grandfather's clock that was made in 1783 in Penns Valley. The works are made entirely of wood. Several of the rocking chairs are made of wood entirely, without the use of nails. There are several old writing desks refinished in their original design.

There are also many other antiques other than the furniture. Old clocks decorate some of the walls and there is an old lamp of the type similar to the one carried by Paul Revere. Antique ink wells and baskets are also in evidence.

1925-26 Hunting Licenses.

Hunters' licenses and tags for 1925 are ready for distribution by county treasurers. The licenses now issued will expire April 30, 1926. They are of aluminum with a dark blue background and light yellow numerals. Under a 1925 legislative act, the fee for a resident hunter's license was increased fifteen cents, making the new licenses cost $1.25.

FARM CALENDAR

Timely Reminders from The Pennsylvania State College

Auto Excursions Worth While.—This is the season for automobile excursions and field days to study one or more important subjects relating to efficient agriculture. Rarely do we hear persons participating in such an event say that it was not worth the time and effort expended many times over. Keep in touch with developments by attending such gatherings along the line of your particular need of agriculture.

Seed Wheat.—Unless your wheat crop was considerably above the average for your community you might be interested in getting a better strain or variety, particularly if it is infested with disease. Look into this matter now and if new seed seems desirable do not wait until seeding time to secure it.

Paralyzed Pallets.—Kill the cripples and slit their intestines from end to end. The tapeworm and the long round-worm may be causing havoc. The Agricultural Extension Service of Pennsylvania State College will be glad to tell you how to combat these parasites.

Supplement Pasture With Grain.—Pastures in many sections of Pennsylvania have been unusually good so far this season. The wise dairyman will plan to supplement the dry short pastures during the latter part of the summer. Corn, oats and bran should form the bulk of the ration with a small amount of gluten, cottonseed meal, or linseed oil meal, if not too laxative.

Fair Exhibits.—The seasons for fairs and shows—local, county, or district is almost upon us. Are you selecting and preparing early the livestock and farm produce you plan to exhibit, and thereby increasing your chances to "place in the money," or are you waiting until the last minute and blaming the judge for not knowing his job when he passes up your exhibit?

Invest Your Money In Certificates-of-Deposit

A Certificate of Deposit might well be called a bond issued by a Bank; it is an engraved receipt certifying that you have deposited here a stated sum of money; and it is a our written agreement to repay the amount deposited, with interest, either to you or to someone you may name.

Every man is a better business man if he has a portion of his cash assets in a Reserve Fund, kept separate and apart from his regular bank account; and there is no better way to invest a Cash Reserve than in Certificates of Deposit.

Certificates of Deposit never fluctuate like many other forms of investment. Hard times, stock market conditions and other causes do not affect them. They are readily convertible into cash, and will be accepted by any bank in the country.
