"These foreigners ought to take a lesson from the young couple at the performance of Hamlet. At the end of the performance, the girl said: 'Wasn't it silly of that Shakespeare fellow to drown Ophelia and kill Hamlet off? Why, he ought to have married them, the chump.'"

The TALE of KIDDIE KATYDID

By Arthur Scott Bailey

THE WARNING

IT MUST not be supposed that all of Kiddie Katydid's family made the same never-ending din at night. Actually it was only the gentlemen that so amused themselves. No doubt the ladies, too, knew the secret about the mysterious Katy—and what she did.

But for some reason they never mentioned the matter. Even when they gossiped among themselves, as they sometimes did, they never touched upon that subject.

Mr. Nighthawk Was One of the Nightly Wanderers.

Furthermore, in the daytime Kiddie and his fellows were as quiet as they could be. Having waked the echoes all night long, they were content, when morning came, to rest silently among the trees and shrubs. And a very good reason did they have, too, for such a habit. During the day there were altogether too many birds flying about, to please the Katydids. And Kiddie often remarked in a joking way that the only birds he cared about were those that didn't care about him!

Of course, there were a few birds that prowled about Pleasant Valley after dark. Mr. Nighthawk was one of that crew of nightly wanderers. And whenever the word was passed around that he had been seen in the neighborhood, Kiddie Katydid tried to lower his solemn chant, because he knew that Mr. Nighthawk was usually in search of something to eat.

Now, when Kiddie Katydid felt hungry he drove away his gnawing pangs by browsing upon leaves and tender twigs. But Mr. Nighthawk had no taste for such fodder.

He had an appetite for insects. And between dusk and dawn a good many of Kiddie Katydid's neighbors of one kind or another found their way into Mr. Nighthawk's tummy.

So you see it was no wonder that Kiddie was not eager to attract the attention of that night rover. Some of the more timid of Kiddie's companions even begged him, at times, to hush. They said he was making such a noise that Mr. Nighthawk would be sure to hear it, even if he were a quarter of a mile away.

But Kiddie Katydid usually laughed at those faint-hearted ones; and often he shrilled his Katy did, Katy did, more loudly than before, just to show them that he was not afraid.

"A person has to take a few chances," he remarked one day. "If we were all afraid to make a sound it would pretty hard on Katy, for then she would have nobody to take her part. And what would people think of her?"

Evidently Kiddie's reason was a good one, because a number of his cousins spoke up at once and said that they agreed with him perfectly. But their sisters all exclaimed that sooner or later Mr. Nighthawk would hear them; and then there would certainly be trouble.

Strangely enough, the words were scarcely out of their mouths before they heard a loud call that struck them cold with fear.

Peent! Peent! The cry came out of the air about them without the least warning. And everybody—including Kiddie Katydid—knew that Mr. Nighthawk had come.

WHO SAID "No Violent Extreme Endures"?

THOMAS CARLYLE, author of this succinct axiom, was the son of a mason and farmer. He was born in Ecclefechan, Dumfriesshire, Scotland, December 4, 1795, and although his parents intended him for a ministerial career, his propensity to authorship at an early age convinced the young man at least that he was more fitted for the pursuit of literature.

Although his first literary attempts were published in the Edinburgh "Encyclopaedia," his career may be said to have begun in the "London Magazine" in 1823, when portions of his "Life of Schiller" appeared. This work in later years was treated separately, and appeared in special form in 1825—Carlyle's first success of note in the literary field.

Few authors have had their works studied so minutely as Carlyle, and his ease and fluency in writing have been seized upon by many as examples of the sort of literature which always will endure.

Much time was spent on his "History of Friedrich the II of Prussia," called "Frederick the Great," and this production of his pen also was the largest of the eminent author turned out. The last two volumes appeared in 1855, and although he continued to some extent in his field, this work in reality marked the end of a successful career.

While in Scotland Carlyle received word of the death in London of his wife, accounting for much of his later seclusion. In his later life he was offered a government pension and a baronetcy, both of which he declined. He died at Chelsea, February 5, 1881.

THE WHY OF SUPERSTITIONS

By H. IRVING KING

SYMPATHETIC MAGIC

YOU will find in some districts your bear's grease and muskrat oil highly recommended as sovereign remedies for bald heads. Also to be used to prevent the hair from falling out. The explanation is very simple: It is merely our old friend sympathetic magic in one of his many medical guises. The hair which covers the body of the bear is long, strong and thick; the hair in the coat of the muskrat is fine, close-set and plentiful. By the magic of contact these hairy qualities are communicated to the grease and the oil and by the magic of transference act upon the scanty locks of the man whose hair is "falling out" or the scanty invisible fur on the pate of the bald-headed man. It is the phase of sympathetic magic which Sir James Frazer calls homeopathic magic—like producing like.

The mind of primitive man, blindly groping for solution of the problem of cause and effect, found nothing so satisfying as this homeopathic theory—which we call sympathetic magic, but which to him was a demonstrable science. When it failed to work it was because something was wrong in the formula employed; or perhaps evil spirits interfered with what, to Mr. Cave-man, was a "law of nature."

Useful for Housewife

A Scandinavian claims to have designed a contrivance that will broadcast refrigeration (according to the inventor) in exactly the same way as present-day wireless stations broadcast music. All that the housewife of the future will have to do is to keep her refrigeration receiver tuned to a central sending station.—Mason City Banner-Times.

"What's in a Name?"

By MILDRED MARSHALL

Facts about your name; its history; meaning; whence it was derived; significance; your lucky day, lucky jewel

VERONICA

VERONICA has full rights to her claims as a body name. It signifies "true picture" and comes from the Latin "verus," meaning true, and the Greek word for image. The two terms were strangely jumbled together by the popular tongue in the name of the crucifix at Lucca, which was called the Veronica and was that "Holy Face of Lucca" by which oaths were taken.

Another Veronica is the same countenance upon a piece of linen at St. Peter's. The origin being forgotten, this is called St. Veronica's handkerchief, and the popular legend is that a woman who had lent her handkerchief to our Blessed Savior to wipe His face during the passage of the "Via Dolorosa" had found the likeness imprinted on it. In a poem on the life of Pilate, we are told that the suffering emperor of Rome, learning that a woman at Jerusalem named "Veronike" possessed this handkerchief which had the power to heal the sick, sent for her and was cured.

In this way, Veronica became a saint, though there was a real Saint Veronica who lived near Milan in the Fifteenth century. The French love the name and call it Veronique. The Scotch, who have an exquisite blue flower known as Veronica, have given the name national popularity.

Jude is Veronica's talismanic gem. It will bring her good health and long life. Thursday is her lucky day and 4 her lucky number.

The Hotel Stenographer
 By Joe Fulkerson

"T's a fine day," announced the Hotel Detective.

"Yes, it's good weather," replied the Hotel Stenographer. "I do not know what we would do without the weather and making pcns. These are the conversational standbys of the stupid."

"Huh?" asked the House Detective.

"Whether it is cold or whether it is hot, we have to have weather, whether or not," punned the girl.

"That always gives original people something to talk about. Like the income tax and the parking problem, we have it always with us."

"It must be wonderful, Kelly, to talk about something pleasant all the time. People who work for the oil industry or had factories during the war, can make their own weather, and in consequence can always talk pleasantly. They run down to Miami whenever there is a blizzard, or up to Montreal when it is hot; they go to Arizona when they have a wet spell, or out in the country to get rained on."

"Don't think I am critical, Kelly. Weather was invented a long time ago, and it is one of our grandest institutions, but when I have nothing else to talk about but the weather, I tune out and keep still for a while till a real bright idea about love or dressmaking, scandal or something new and interesting comes to my mind."

"I used to know a John who never talked anything but the weather. He was so stupid the dentist was afraid to give him gas, because he couldn't tell when he became unconscious."

"That's pretty hard on us both, ain't it?" asked Kelly.

"Us?"

"Yeah," replied Kelly, "you ain't been doing nothing for the last ten minutes but talk about the weather."

"On your way," cried the girl. "I am a busy woman."

HOW TO KEEP WELL

DR. FREDERICK R. GREEN
 Editor of "HEALTH"
 (© 1925, Western Newspaper Union.)

THE SCHOOL NURSE

IN MANY towns the school nurse has become as much a part of the local school machinery as the teacher or the janitor. Most people regard the school nurse as a recent idea. This is not correct, as shown by a bulletin recently issued by the United States public health service. Dr. Taliaferro Clark, one of the public service experts and a recognized authority on children's diseases, says that school inspection is nearly one hundred years old. In 1837, France by royal decree made the inspection of schools and the physical examination and supervision of both pupils and teachers compulsory. It was over fifty years before this country profited by France's example. In 1894, the school board of Boston first adopted school inspection as a part of its work. This step was taken, as has happened in many public health advances, on account of an unusual epidemic of infectious diseases among school children.

The example of Boston was rapidly followed by other cities, until today practically all progressive towns have some form of school inspection as a safeguard for their children.

The first practical question which arose was, Who should do the work of school health supervision?

The teacher couldn't do it, her time was all needed for such work. The physician? Yes, partly, of course, but few towns had a doctor who could give his entire time to school work. To fill this need, the school health nurse was created.

In addition to her regular training school and hospital work, which all nurses must have to fit them for their work, the school health nurse should have experience and training in public health nursing, practical instruction in the feeding of children and knowledge of the sanitary requirements for school buildings and grounds. Experience has shown that there should be about one nurse for every 1,500 children. In country districts, on account of the scattered population and the amount of ground to cover, it has been found advisable to combine the school nursing and the public health nursing.

The school nurses' work includes weighing and measuring all the children at least twice a year, weeding out those who are below par in nourishment and growth and securing special food for those who need it; finding and correcting any deformity or beginning curvature of the spine; finding defects of vision, teeth, etc., and guarding all the school children from contagious diseases, either inside or outside the school.

SOME SUPERSTITIONS

ONE of the stock objections made to the use of antitoxins and vaccines from animals is that the use of animal matter is harmful to the human body. Yet animal products of various sorts have been used for centuries in the treatment of disease, not only by doctors but by the common people as well.

For centuries, every doctor, when he went to call on his patients, carried a bottle of leeches in his pocket. So common was this that, by association, the doctor was known as a "leech" and is so referred to by many of the early dramatists and poets.

Animal substances figured largely in the old prescriptions. The use of many was largely due to superstition, others had a reason for their use, though the reason has in many cases been lost. In others, modern research has, in a surprising manner, confirmed some of the old beliefs.

Nothing but superstition can explain why Middle Age sufferers from rheumatism were advised to take a black cat to bed with them. A magpie, dried and powdered, was used for treating epilepsy as late as 1880 in Germany. One of the prized remedies for dropsy in Holland was tying a pickled herring on each leg.

Some of these old customs have a real reason behind them. An old remedy for intestinal diseases was a broth of red ants. This was long regarded as a shining example of the ignorance of our forefathers. But they weren't so ignorant, after all. We now know that ants are full of formic acid, a powerful antiseptic. So ant soup probably killed a lot of germs.

It is still a custom in some parts of the world to expose rheumatic persons to bees and wasps. When a bee stings you, he gives you a hypodermic injection of formic acid which goes directly into the blood and may destroy or neutralize the poisons which cause rheumatism.

One of the favorite prescriptions of the old Greeks was baked toad. The toad was roasted alive in a hot oven and was then reduced to a powder and given to patients with heart disease. How silly! Yes, but recently biological chemists have found that the skin of the toad contains certain alkaloids which are strong heart stimulants.

Snake venom was shown many years ago by Oliver Wendell Holmes to be very much like our modern serums. Natives in the tropics often drink diluted snake venom to make them immune to snake bites.

Mankind has used animal products for medicine through all the ages and will probably always continue to do so.

Do You Cough?

Rosnoke, Va.—"I had a very bad spell of bronchitis—would cough and choke up with phlegm, especially at night and it would break my rest. I got so nervous and weak I could hardly walk. I also had night sweats, had no appetite and was just a physical wreck. I could not get anything that would help me until I began taking Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and it relieved me of the bronchitis. After the cough disappeared I got well and strong. In addition to being good for coughs, colds and bronchial trouble, 'Golden Medical Discovery' is an excellent tonic and blood medicine."—James Henry Powers, 1503 Wise Ave., S. E.
