Chains for French Women

In Paris a curious caprice of feminine fashion is illustrated in the jewelers' windows. The long pearl necklace, formerly much favored by smart women, has developed into a huge chain which, in everything but weight, resembles the sort of thing worn by slaves in ancient times. Bracelets have assumed an equally massive appearance. The clasps of these strange ornaments are knobs of ornamental stone roughly carved in quaint figures and looking as if they might have been dug from some long-forgotten haunt of prehistoric man.

From School Teacher to Great Eminence

POINTS ON KEEPING WELL

DR. FREDERICK R. GREEN Editor of "HEALTH"

CATCHING SMALLPOX THROUGH THE NOSE

SMALLPOX is the original and typical germ disease. Up to the discovery of vaccination by Jenner about one hundred years ago, it was the commonest and the most terrible of all the contagious diseases. A proverb of those days said "From death and smallpox, no one escapes." It was so common that at one time, when a notorious criminal escaped from an English prison and his description was printed and distributed all over England, one of the important signs by which he could be recognized was that he had never had smallpox, and so had no pits on his face. Smallpox was so common then that anyone who was not pock-marked was conspicuous. Today, you can stand on a crowded street corner for hours and watch thousands of persons pass before seeing one pock-marked face.

Jenner heard a young dairymaid say that she couldn't have smallpox because she had already gotten cowpox from one of the cows she had milked. This was a general belief among the common people in the dairy region of England. Jenner proved by experiments with human beings that inoculation with cowpox virus would protect against smallpox. He had to make his experiments on human beings, because at that time there was no animal known that was susceptible to smallpox. Jenner's work was done nearly fifty years before Pasteur's time, and no one at that day knew how to find and study disease germs. In fact, there wasn't a microscope in the world in Jenner's day that would have made them visible. So Jenner could only develop a method for protecting individuals against this disease without attempting in any way to find out what caused it.

Strangely enough, in all our progress in discovering the cause and preventing the spread of tuberculosis, yellow fever, cholera, malaria, diphtheria, wound infections and other serious diseases, our knowledge today regarding smallpox is little greater than it was in Jenner's time. We know it is some kind of a microscopic germ, but what it is, where or how it exists outside the body or how it gets into the body, no one knows. In a report of the medical research council of England appears the result of some work just completed by Dr. M. H. Gordon, which at last increases our knowledge. Gordon finds that rabbits and some breeds of monkeys are susceptible to smallpox and that the disease probably begins with symptoms very much like a bad "cold in the head." This means that smallpox is probably one of the great group of respiratory diseases and that infection occurs not through the skin as has always been supposed, but through the discharges from the throat and nose of the smallpox patient.

OUR DEADLIEST WEAPON

AT THE close of the year, an estimate made by the automobile industries shows that there are now in use in the United States 20,300,000 automobiles. These vehicles were responsible, in 1924, for 15,528 deaths in the registration area. As this area now includes 88.5 per cent of the total population, it is estimated by the United States public health report that the total number of deaths from automobile accidents for 1924 would be 17,565. This is a death rate of 15.7 per 100,000, a steady increase for the last five years. In 1923 it was 14.9; in 1922 it was 12.5; in 1921 it was 11.5, and in 1920 only 10.4. So the death rate from automobiles has increased over 50 per cent in five years.

As the federal bureau of the census assigns the cause of death from collisions in all cases to the heavier vehicles, these figures do not include deaths due to collisions between automobiles and electric cars or railroads. So this total of 17,565 should be increased by the addition of all deaths due to railroad accidents involving automobiles.

The Interstate Commerce commission reports that in 1924 there were 1,088 deaths due to collisions between automobiles and railroad trains. This added to the total number of deaths due directly to automobiles would indicate that the total death list for automobile accidents for 1924 was 19,283. Nearly twenty thousand lives lost through automobiles in one year. The distribution of these accidents by states shows curious differences. Any comparison of the exact number of deaths is, of course, unfair, as the population in different states varies widely. The only fair basis is that in which all our mortality statistics are figured, namely, the rate per 100,000 of population.

On that basis the rate for automobile deaths in California is 32 per 100,000, over twice the country's average rate of 15.7, while the rate in North Dakota is only 6.6, only one-fifth that of California. Naturally, the rate for cities is higher than for the country. In time we may learn to live with the automobile, as we have learned to live with the railroad train, but the present rate is a truly expensive one.

The TALE of KIDDIE KATYDD by Arthur Scott Bailey

SOLOMON OWL'S CRY

MR. NIGHTHAWK was fidgeting about on a branch of a maple tree. What Kiddie Katydid had said to him about Solomon Owl frightened him. And he almost wished he hadn't come to Farmer Green's dooryard that night. But the more he thought about the matter, the less he was inclined to believe that there was really any danger. And soon he peered at Kiddie Katydid through the darkness and said: "You almost fooled me. But I know now what you are trying to do. You were trying to scare me away from here!" "Katy did, Katy did; she did, she did!" "You needn't say that!" Mr. Nighthawk exclaimed. "Katy has nothing to do with my case. She hasn't even mentioned Solomon Owl's name."

"Whoo-Whoo-Whoo!"—It Was Solomon Owl's Weird Call.

"You don't understand," Kiddie told him. "I'm speaking of an entirely different matter." And then Mr. Nighthawk had another idea. He chased the frown away, from his face and smiled very pleasantly. "I'm sorry that you don't feel like jumping for me," he observed. "But I'd be just as glad to see you fly! I remember being told that you fly almost as well as you jump." "Oh, I can't begin to fly as well as you can," Kiddie Katydid told Mr. Nighthawk. "I only wish I knew how to coast down out of the sky the way you do, without being dashed upon the ground. . . . How do you manage to stop so suddenly?"

DIANA

ONE of the most beautiful names which comes to us through Roman mythology is Diana. She was originally Divajana, goddess of the night, but, as she was pure as Vesta, she was identified with the Greek Artemis and given possession of the temple of Ephesus and was thenceforth regarded as the goddess of the silver bow and daughter of Jupiter and Latona.

In the sixteenth century, when romances of chivalry began to make their appearance, Jorge de Montemayor, the Spanish poet, named his heroine Diana, and her name was quickly taken up by the sponsors of the lovely widow, Diane de Poitiers, whose colors of black and white Henry II of France wore even to his last fatal tournament. The Cavalier court during its residence in France adopted Diana and carried it back to England.

In some instances Diana is regarded as the name of the charitable lady referred to in the Scriptures as "Dinah of the Ephesians." In the Eighteenth century there was a Monna Diana in Florence whose chief claim to fame was that she mistook a large stone that fell on her head off a building, for a small pebble, because she wore such an elaborate headdress.

A LINE O' CHEER

By John Kendrick Bangs. TRANSPLANTED CHILL Winter does not kill the rose. But takes it from the garden-close And plants it till the cold shall pass. Upon the cheek of lad and lass. Where it may bloom and safe abide The coming of the summertime.

George Sidney

"Pooh! That's nothing!" Mr. Nighthawk said. "It's easy, once you know how." In spite of his way of belittling his flying feats, Mr. Nighthawk was secretly very proud of his skill at sky coasting. And when Kiddie Katydid asked him if he wouldn't kindly give an exhibition of the art of fancy flying, Mr. Nighthawk couldn't help feeling pleased. He wanted to display his skill. But there was just one thing that troubled him. He was afraid that if he climbed up into the sky, before he dropped down again Kiddie Katydid would have vanished. And that didn't suit Mr. Nighthawk's plans.

"Will you promise to stay right where you are until I come back?" he asked. Now, Kiddie Katydid had intended to hide himself as soon as Mr. Nighthawk should leave him. But there was nothing he could do now except to agree to Mr. Nighthawk's proposal. "I'll promise," said Kiddie. "If you'll promise me that you'll surely return. Otherwise I might have to stay here for a month, perhaps, waiting for you." "Oh! I'll come back in a minute or two," Mr. Nighthawk laughed, as he looked hungrily at Kiddie. "Don't you worry about my not coming back to talk with you!"

Then he began climbing upward into the sky. And he had gone about as high as he wished to, when all at once a rolling Whoo-who-who, whoo-who-who, to-who-ah startled him. It was Solomon Owl's weird call. And it drove every thought except one out of Mr. Nighthawk's head. That one idea—to escape—filled his mind completely. And he turned and hurried away from Farmer Green's place as fast as he could go; for Mr. Nighthawk feared that Solomon Owl would arrive there at any moment. As for Kiddie Katydid, when he heard Solomon's cry he knew at once that he was rid of Mr. Nighthawk. And Kiddie's "Katy did, Katy did; she did, she did," rang out again and again in the night. All his friends and cousins crept out of their hiding-places and joined in the chorus. And everybody enjoyed a good laugh over Mr. Nighthawk's visit—and his sudden departure.

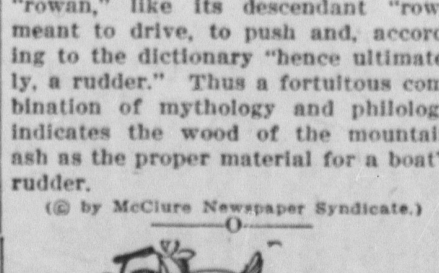

THE WHY of SUPERSTITIONS

By H. IRVING KING

ROWAN RUDDERS

IN SOME places along the Atlantic coast there is belief among sailors and fishermen that if the rudders of their boats are made of rowan wood—that is of the wood of the mountain ash—that the boats will be faster. The Newfoundland fishermen, according to the American Folk Lore society, are especially given to this superstition which clearly originated in the dim regions of Norse mythology. Among the Northern nations the rowan was second in sacred and magical qualities only to the ash, the sacred Isdragal from which the human race descended.

This alone would account for the desirability of having the rudder, the directing part of a boat, made of rowan wood. But the belief that a rowan rudder makes a boat go faster points to something more. The key to this something is apparently found in the ancestry of the word "row" which is derived from the Anglo-Saxon word "rowan" and the word "mean" to drive, to push and, according to the dictionary "hence ultimately, a rudder." Thus a fortuitous combination of mythology and philology indicates the wood of the mountain ash as the proper material for a boat's rudder.

It arrests and turns wandering fancies in the safe direction, dispenses a sullen countenance, putting lips, cynical and snappy words, and awakens dormant sensibilities of our dutiful obligations to one another. Dismiss self-sympathy and usher in self-censure. Do not shudder at the crack of the whip, nor resent just punishment, for it will make of you a better man or woman, give you new strength, a nobler spirit and so sharpen your wits and clear your blurred vision that you will experience no more difficulty in deciding off-hand between substance and illusion. In addition, it will take you to happiness and bestow new power in making friends and achieving honorable success.

George Sidney

This popular "movie" star, appearing in a prominent production, was born in 1877 in New York city. He has been in the theatrical business practically all his life, his entire career being confined to comedy roles. He succeeds to parts played by the late Sam Bernard. Sidney's hobby, he says, is the looking upon the bright side of life.

AN ABBREVIATED STORY

PRIVATE GROUNDS

THE regiment was lined up to see General Pellets award Private Grounds his medal. "Private Grounds," said the general as he pinned the coveted ribbon on the young man's chest, "I wish to state publicly that the awarding board does not bestow lightly this highest of decorations."

"When we learned that, armed only with a paper of pins, you stormed a machine gun nest and captured sixteen of the enemy, we were impressed, but decided that, in this war of almost universal heroism, your deed was not entitled to the highest recognition. "Likewise, when we were told that, camouflaged as a reel of barbed wire, you rolled into an enemy first line trench and obtained valuable information, we arrived at the same conclusion. But—when it came to light that, among thirty men who were digging a mine under what turned out to be a limburger cheese refinery, you alone, after the others had been driven back by the unspeakable fumes, persisted and finished the job at the cost of a bad case of small shock—then, my boy, there was no further question." And the cheers that split the air made a Hun division, five miles away, retreat even faster.

SOMETHING TO THINK ABOUT

By F. A. WALKER

SUBSTANCE—ILLUSION?

YOU will find after practice that it is a good policy to take frequent accounts of your mind-asset, so at the end of a month or a year at the farthest, you may be able to decide whether you are heading for abundance or bankruptcy. To rely on a snap-shot picture of your attitude toward the world and that portion of its work to which destiny has seemingly assigned you, is unproductive of trustworthy results.

If you want to keep going in the right direction, when you are traveling with haste and impetuosity as companions, you must stop at the weather-worn signs posted along the way and read them with scrupulous care. If there is friction between you and your employer, and you are in doubt as to what it means, or as to what causes it, stop a while in your hot-headed pursuit and study the signs at the cross-roads.

And at the same time look deeply into your own heart, for it is possible that the seat of the trouble is there. If you go about this self-inspection with the same wide-eyed eagerness that you exhibit in searching for evil in others you will not lose your way. This method of finding your path in the dark is as useful as it is astonishing.

It arrests and turns wandering fancies in the safe direction, dispenses a sullen countenance, putting lips, cynical and snappy words, and awakens dormant sensibilities of our dutiful obligations to one another. Dismiss self-sympathy and usher in self-censure. Do not shudder at the crack of the whip, nor resent just punishment, for it will make of you a better man or woman, give you new strength, a nobler spirit and so sharpen your wits and clear your blurred vision that you will experience no more difficulty in deciding off-hand between substance and illusion. In addition, it will take you to happiness and bestow new power in making friends and achieving honorable success.

A Wonder
Said Edwin J. Marshall, Los Angeles rancher: "Economy is the trump card in ranching. It accomplishes miracles. It's almost as good as the story. "A group of young clerks were talking about the economical spirit of their boarding-house landlords. Finally one said: "My landlord's a wonder. We had a ten-pound ham for supper last night, and she carved it in such thin slices that after we were all served the ham actually weighed twelve pounds and a half."
