D. J. NIEMAN = Millheim

Fifty years ago two men, Bell and Watson, experimenting in a Boston attic, comprised the only "telephone organization" in the world. Today there are in the Bell System 112,000 men and women, expertly trained, who plan, manufacture, construct, maintain and operate this great system of communication.

Today—a third of a million

Two men, with scant facilities and less money at their disposal, winding coils, twanging clock springs and shouting into strange contraptions of wood and parchment, finally created the telephone.

In 1876 Alexander Graham Bell and Thomas A. Watson, his assistant, were the only two "telephone men" in the world.

Today there are twenty-two thousand Bell men and women in Pennsylvania alone.

In the Bell System there are a third of a million.

Every day brings an increase in the number of people they serve and in the volume of calls they handle.

The inherent tendency of telephone growth is to complicate the mechanisms and their operation disproportionately.

Each added telephone means more than just one more line and instrument. The problem of its interconnection with every other telephone of the System—the natural complication of the switching job as thousands and tens of thousands of new users are added, would long ago have swamped the service had constant improvement and simplification of equipment and method not more than kept pace.

Alexander Graham Bell invented the telephone. But modern telephone service is the product of a myriad of inventions, scientific and technical, which make the facility of that service seem almost commonplace.

So must it and will it continue to be.
