FARM CALENDAR

Timely Reminders from
The Pennsylvania State College

Call Out Boobers—Begin this month to dispose of birds that quit laying, since in most cases they will not come back into profitable production before next January or February. In most flocks birds that cease laying before September should be culled.

Come One, Come All—Take the wife and family to the Farmers' Field Day at the Pennsylvania State College, June 17 and 18. A fine program has been arranged for the women, and the little folks will find many interesting things to keep them busy. Make it a family day.

Pigs Are Pigs—Pigs are pigs, but some are better than others. Some pigs are given better care and feed than those on neighboring farms. Blood, feed, and care will bring many litters safely through the six months to the ton goal while others not so well favored will struggle in vain.

Keep Flies Out—Screened and shaded stables will keep out the flies. Cow comfort and sanitation will be promoted by taking these precautions.

Do Not Delay Planting—By this time all of the first crops should be planted in the garden. The cool season has caused many gardeners to hold back the planting of the tender crops, such as tomatoes, peppers, eggplants, and lima beans. There should be no further delay in getting these crops into the field as they all require a long season to reach maturity. Dwarf limas may perhaps be planted up to the tenth of June.
