SPRING MILLS

Prof. A. Merrill Allison and son of Chicago, spent a two weeks' vacation with the former's sisters, Mrs. (Dr.) H. S. Braucht and Mrs. C. P. Long, and brother, Harry Allison.

School opened on Monday with a large attendance: Primary, teacher, Mabel Musser, 33 pupils; intermediate, A. C. Duck, teacher, 27 pupils; grammar, Russell Condo, teacher, 32 pupils. There will be other pupils added later in the term. There are large classes in the Vocational school also.

Ambrose Gentzel, of Shamokin, spent some time with his parents, George Gentzel, and wife.

Ida Long, of Uniontown, is spending her vacation in town.

Wm. Smith and wife were Sunday visitors in Clearfield county.

John Andrew Myers and wife, of Williamsport, spent a few days at the John Myers home.

BOALSBERG.

Austin Dale is recovering from his recent illness.

Mrs. George Hall and Mrs. Alice Macmillan spent Thursday in Bellefonte.

Mr. and Mrs. David Stuart and daughter Martha, of Pittsburgh, spent the past week with relatives in town.

Paul Brouse, of Harrisburg, visited his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Brouse, on Labor Day.

Miss Alice Reitz returned Sunday from a two weeks' visit in Elmira, New York.

Miss Dorothy Lonberger went to Hubblesburg Saturday, having accepted a position in the Hubblesburg High School.

Mr. and Mrs. Reuben Stuart and daughter Elizabeth went to Greensburg Monday where they expect to locate.

Dr. and Mrs. Grant Keller, daughter Martha, son Kenneth and Dr. Ralph of Wisconsin, were callers in town on Tuesday.

Frank Hosterman returned home after spending the summer in Ohio and is enjoying a visit with his parents before the opening of Penn State.

W. H. Reish and family moved to State College on Wednesday where they are occupying their new home on Locust Lane.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Fisher and son Charles returned to their home in Danville on Labor Day after spending the summer months in town.

After spending several months at their home on School street, Prof. E. H. Meyer, wife and daughter left early Thursday morning for their home in Newark, N. J. Miss Elizabeth stopping at Bloomsburg, where she has secured a position in the schools.

The landing of a Government plane on W. H. Suta's farm, near town, on Sunday evening, drew quite a crowd of interested spectators. The pilot and companion were guests of Col. T. D. Boal for the night, and after some repairs to the plane took to the air Monday forenoon.

Mrs. Rose Leisher Hippard, of Cleveland, Ohio, greeted friends in town last week. Mrs. Hippard is a daughter of the late Rev. G. W. Leisher who twenty-six years ago was pastor of the Lutheran church in Boalsburg; Charles Hippard, Mr. and Mrs. Miller and Miss Miller were other members of the party enroute to Chambersburg.

School opened Tuesday morning with a good attendance. H. M. Hosterman is principal; Ralph Dale, assistant; Samuel Ross, eighth grade; Miss Margaret Schenk, of Howard, grammar; Miss Marian Dale, primary; Mac Mothersbaugh is teacher of the Shingletown school; Harold Callahan at Linden Hall.

Lieut. Bettis Dead.

Wednesday morning of last week as the Reporter announcing that Lieut. Cyrus K. Bettis had been taken to a Washington, D. C. hospital in an hospital ship and that he had some chance to recover, was being printed, the army ace passed out of this life.

Lieut. Bettis was about 35 years of age, and a native of Michigan, his parents now living at Port Huron. He entered the aviation service during the world war and served a short time in France. He gained fame, however, last year, when he defeated the navy ace in the big flight race for the Pulitzer cup.

Highest Priced Laughs Cost Little to Enjoy.

That sounds funny, but it's no joke; the sober truth is that the fifteen big colored comics every Sunday in the New York American are created by the highest paid cartoonists in the country who generate enough high-powered laughter every week for fifteen comedy films or musical comedies—all the big favorites are there: Bringing Up Father, Little Jimmy, Barney Google and Spark Plug, Tillie the Toller, the Ketanjammer Kids, Happy Hooligan, Boob McNutt, Toots and Casper, and many others. They are high-priced because they are the best, the funniest obtainable—they cost little because everybody reads them and they are only a fraction of the big value you get every Sunday in the New York American.

You will want to read that stirring novel, "The Mystery of the Jade Cuff-links" by John Hammond in which high society and the underworld of London are brought into contact through a weird succession of events—a great story webbed with appealing romance.

With these and so many other fascinating features, it's no wonder you often find the New York American sold out. Better tell your dealer to reserve your copy every Sunday—if he does not carry the American, just send his name in; we will arrange so he will have it for you.

A Robber of the Road

A STORY OF THE LAST DAYS OF DAVID LEWIS

—By— HENRY W. SHOEMAKER

In reality the younger rider was Signa Kabruhn, an Ironmaster's favorite niece, from the Cumberland Valley, a girl educated at an European convent, who becoming infatuated with the robber, donned boy's costume, and followed him on his adventures. Lewis was artful, and pretending not to observe Dally, rode to the call door, and called for Betty Birchinal, the deer hunter's wife. Of course she was delighted to see him again, and imagining that her "crush" was reciprocated, never supposed that he had dallied with Dally in Red Panther's Cave for nearly a week only a couple of months previously. Birchinal himself was at home, as was his aged mother, and they soon appeared in the doorway, and warmly welcomed him, and were introduced to his young friend, "Mr. Coutremain," which has been the mother's name of "Harrisburg." All became very friendly, and Dally brought out a small cask of cordial made from wild crab-apple blossoms, a specialty of High Valley, and they were soon discoursing in Pennsylvania Dutch, the "esperanto" of the mountain people, of no matter what complicated origins, Huguenot, Waldensian, Swiss, Spanish, Bohemian, Greek, Aisatian, Jewish, Welsh, Gipsy, or Aborigine. Signa Kabruhn, alias "Mr. Coutremain," was of a strange mental warp; she fell out of love with Lewis the robber, and fell in love with Dally the tall. As she leaned against the smooth stem of a balsam fir (brought from Blair Meadows) in the yard, she eyed admiringly the divinely tall, exquisitely slim young girl, and opened her silver cigarette case which she had gotten in Craeow after leaving the convent, on which were engraved the arms of her Scotch-German house like those of many celebrated families of Pennsylvania Colonial days (Hay, Marshall, Buchanan, Crawford, Byce, Redd, Silvis, Nelson, Mackey, Brown, Black and Green), a creasy cock triumphant rising from a margrave's helmet, the shield quartered with rising cocks and cherry diamonds. Dally was equally interested, but with curiosity rather than love, for she had never seen such a graceful young man before; a silver cigarette case or a cigarette; the nearest had been a Pittsburgh stogie in a wooden box.

Though Lewis was outwardly attentive to Betty Birchinal he managed to make a "date" with Dally to meet him in a week's time in Red Panther's Cave as he would be then finished "sticking up" the wealthy travelers on the East Fork. Meeting her one evening as switch in hand she was driving home the little red woolly-coated cow, of the old pioneer breed, he told her of his great love. The clean-up on the Sinnemahoning was to be his last job, he had enough; though a price was set on his head, and he drew from his pocket and unfolded a copy of a broadside offering a reward, dead or alive, which he read to her as follows: $500 Will Be Paid for the Capture of David Lewis, a Robber of the Road, Living or Dead. He is 35 Years Old, About 5 ft. 8 in. Tall, Weighs 175 Pounds, Red-headed, Stoop-shouldered, Blue Eyes, and Wears Red Whiskers. He had no fear of that, but his head was in a whirl with love for "Dally the fair, Dally the magnificent," as he called her. He had a pot of gold, a large fortune in fact hidden in Indian town Gap; they would go and get it, and take ship from Philadelphia to some port in Spain, would tour Europe, and then settle down in his old family home in Wales, where he would buy the ancestral farmstead, "In the shadow of Snowdon." Dally was enraptured to think that she was really the beloved of Lewis, whom all women loved, and that he would take her away from her unhappy home to a bigger and brighter life overseas, but above all being a girl of good principles she rejoiced that she had expedited his reformation, for she could not believe that any man who "took it from the rich and gave it to the poor" was bad at heart. Lewis had explained to his protegee "Mr. Coutremain" his errand to the North. It was too hurried to require an accomplice, the "youth" should wait at the Birchinal hunting camp until his return a week hence. He was always clever at throwing folks off his trail. He departed, leaving Coutremain and Dally together. While Lewis had been there nothing untoward had happened, but once gone the love-stricken Betty Birchinal seemed to have to spend her pent-up rage on everything in general, and her step-daughter in particular. She kicked the dog, stoned the chickens, ran the fork in the cow, threw pewter plates at her husband, and cursed her mother-in-law, whipped Dally with the Hazel rod which was always kept in a conspicuous place in the kitchen, all in the presence of the guest, who was supposed to take such things for granted in the average household. But she didn't. She was sorry for the livestock, Abiah and the old Lovina, but the treatment of the beautiful Dally roused strange resentments in her breast. Lewis she opined had a liking for the girl, why didn't he take her away, but then maybe he did not know of the barbarities practiced on her fair frail body. One afternoon Dally and the supposed youth went across the ridge towards Fowler's, now Inglesby, to hunt chestnuts. It was a glorious autumn day, crisp and cool, and the great hardwoods were ablaze with color; the ruffed grouse were drumming on the hillsides.

STAR HITS FOR UNION CO. FAIR

EVERYTHING BEING SET FOR THE GREATEST OF ALL EVENTS

"Leaping Lena" the Fractious Ford and two good bands for each day's entertainment at the Union County Fair which will be held on September 28, 29, 30 and October 1st.

Most people of today have at some time owned a "Ford" and are fully aware of the vagaries of this machine, but no one can thoroughly appreciate the awkward dilemmas they can place one in until they have witnessed the side-splitting antics of "Leaping Lena, the Fractious Ford." This car certainly behaves in a manner quite unbecoming—a sedate self-respecting roadster, and one would be inclined to believe her to be full of forbidden liquor rather than twenty-five cents a gallon gasoline.

At first she appears to be a quiet, tractable sort of thing, when suddenly, for no apparent reason, she literally flies right off the handle. Then the fun begins.

She snorts and squirts and explodes in a wild and ferocious fashion, giving the would-be chauffeurs a mighty merry chase for their money, but all must come to an end; "Leaping Lena" finally works herself up to such a pitch that she blows up and limps wearily of the track.

It is a screamingly funny travesty from beginning to end and one that makes the grand stand simply rock with laughter, something you cannot afford to miss. "Leaping Lena" will give two performances on the afternoon of Wednesday, Thursday and Friday of the fair.

The musical attraction will be entirely different from that of previous years with two bands on each day of fair. Wednesday the well known New Berlin and Mifflinburg bands will be the attraction. Thursday the celebrated 53-piece Moose band of Selinsgrove and the Green Burr band of Clinton county will participate in the big day of fair. Friday the "Gigs" band of Beaver Springs and famous Citizens' Band of Lewisburg will be the musical attraction.

One of the bands will be selected to play on the grounds during the day and the other will furnish music in front of the grand stand for the free acts and races. All the bands secured will appear each morning on the streets of Lewisburg before leaving for the fair grounds.

Free Tickets for School Children.

All school teachers in Centre county are requested to make application to the secretary of the Union County Fair, Mr. C. M. Romer, Lewisburg, Pa., at the earliest date possible for the number of tickets necessary to supply their pupils up to and including the Eighth Grade. The Fair Association will be pleased to supply all free admission tickets to the teachers for distribution.
