Drastic Changes in New Chapeaux

Backward Draped Crown and Embroidered Trimmings Are Important

The Paris openings, displaying fall and winter headgear have been in progress for some time and from among a tremendous variety of new themes one fact stands out sharply—the utility garconne chapeau, for many seasons the dominant millinery type, has been relegated to a position of minor importance. What is far more important, however, this fall it will remain in eclipse, asserts a Paris fashion correspondent in the New York Herald-Tribune.

It is an old, old story, this neglect of the cloche and its variations at the openings. Season after season Rebox, Agnes and Rose Descat have bravely launched a campaign intended to slatter the hardy cloche tradition. At each new millinery showing in recent years every conceivable type of elaborate hat was exhibited, not only by this eminent Paris triumvirate but by their minor satellites throughout the various continents as well. Simplicity was carefully shunned; the all-occasion garconne chapeau, mannish to the point of severity, was deliberately slighted, partly in the interests of art and partly for reasons economic. And then, as each new season rose to its height, the high crowns and the broad brims, the feathered models and the flowered models, would fade from the landscape while the disdained cloche rode high on the crest of the mode—an inevitable item in every smart woman's wardrobe. The fashionists had pointed thumbs down on the valiant efforts of the Paris modistes.

This season the characteristic prologue of elaborate millinery was once more offered by the Paris modistes. More than that, deliberate campaigns were launched, their purposes being to foster ornate millinery and to replace the utility hat with the occasion chapeau. Hat consciousness, meaning the discriminating selection of different hats for different functions, was broadcast throughout the land in a final concerted attempt to veen mildly from the lure of the simple all-occasion cloche. Yet, despite these splendidly organized efforts, in the early months of the present season it appeared as though the Paris boux, Agnes, Marla Guy, Ellane, Alex and Le Monnier, the fall hats unmistakably demonstrate the new spirit of millinery. As you glance through the illustrated models you will be struck by the diversity of types shown—indeed, one cannot point definitely to this or that characteristic of an individual hat and indicate a general trend. There are high square crowns and low draped crowns, feathered trimmings and no trimmings, broad brims and hairline brims. Feminine elaboration, of course, is the keynote, but it is arrived at in as many and diverse ways as you might wish—at least there will be no running to type in the millinery of this particular autumn.

Velvet and felt are favored hat fabrics of autumn, and they are far in advance of all others. Velvet is an excellent material with which to achieve decorous effects. Felt is often used in combination with contrasted fabrics—as often it is used alone, but in several different tints not too far apart. Hatters' plush is particularly favored by Marla Guy, while solet is featured by several other modistes.

Rebox is making a particular fetish of the high, square crown, while Agnes, with a backward draped crown, has achieved an effect which is decidedly more youthful. Save among certain types, this high Rebox crown cannot be easily worn. It does not lack in youth, but it is a little too regal, coming after a long succession of boyish hats. When the season is well advanced indications point to a predominance of rounded and draped crowns.

Brimms are more diverse and complicated than last season, and there is a decided increase in the number of wider brimmed hats being shown. The maturing season will not witness any sweeping return to picture types, but it will account for more medium brimmed models than in any autumn since the war.

Black and the Wine Range.

Black once more stands first among colors, but it is by no means prescribed. The wine shades are next in frequency, after which come blue and the beige range. It will not be a particularly colorful hat season as far as the hues themselves are concerned, but it will be made striking by the use of unusual ornamentations on sober backgrounds.

For one thing, embroidery is profusely employed on the autumn hats. Paradise plumes, too, are featured, though not so lavishly. Aligrettes and striking ornaments are also used to embellish the new models. Such novel treatments as that of Rose Descat, pasting velvet on the facing of felt hats, are more the rule than the exception. Even feathers—now that the Rebox feather boa is enjoying such a vogue—are used to trim hats, and they emphasize the ensemble note; that is, the boa should be of the same color ostrich as the chapeau trimming.

In summation, elaborate hats have finally been launched successfully, and you need no longer fear that one of these luxuriously trimmed affairs will single you out as behind the mode, or, what is just as bad, awkwardly in advance of it. You may choose freely from among a most diversified assortment, and when you select, have in mind the frock or coat with which this particular hat is to be worn. A formal frock requires a formal hat this season—for sports there are the garconne models. But it is certain the twain should never be mixed.

The varying shades of tan are still the most seen in gloves, since tan is a sufficiently neutral shade to blend with any costume. As in the case of handbags, however, gray gloves are selected for the gray costume, and occasionally one sees a very striking and attractive match between dress and gloves of some more vivid color. White is, of course, worn with the very light ensemble, and it is assured that fall will bring a return of popularity for both the white and the black glove.

Canada Institutes

Bird Sanctuaries

With the progress of settlement the Canadian prairies are losing those special characteristics generally associated with them. Their isolation, their treelessness, their lack of social amenities, are becoming things of the past.

Yet certain developments need to be regulated. For example, the Department of the Interior has just set aside a number of public shooting grounds, and has added eleven bird sanctuaries to those already established. These regions contain the most important breeding grounds on the American continent for wild fowl, which, from time immemorial, have found in marsh and reedy lake food and security. The advent of civilization, with its attendant draining of swamps, tends to reduce the size of the breeding grounds and this, together with increased facilities for sport, has reduced the number of birds to an alarming extent, some species, indeed, being threatened with extinction.

Trinity

The weather has been playing havoc with the sandstone exterior of old Trinity church in New York and it was feared at first that the crumbling process was due to some defect in the walls, but a thorough examination of the structure indicates that the walls are just as sound as when they were built. The flaking of the exterior sandstone is caused by the changing weather. The stone is of a porous nature and absorbs the moisture, which freezes at times and causes the stone to flake off. The walls are to be treated to a bath of paraffin, applied after having been heated by an electric blast. This is the same process that was used years ago on the Egyptian obelisk which stands in Central park, and which was similarly treated.

Hindu Boy Scouts

The boy scout movement has penetrated well into India, where several good working organizations have already made themselves felt with the youth of the land. The Hindu boy scouts recently held an exhibit showing the results of their work in camping, pioneering, handicraft, bookbinding, carpentry, and many indoor as well as all of the outdoor arts. Strangely enough the boys have not adopted any of the Indian games for scouting games.

Shell Fossils in Well

In drilling an oil well recently near Medicine Hat, a stratum of fish and shell fossils was found. The fossils were struck at a depth of 3,720 feet, and it was apparent that they were being washed into the well. Other finds were reported. Iron pyrites and talcum were found at varying depths, the talcum rock being about 750 feet down.

Too Much "Acid?"

Excess Uric Acid Gives Rise to Many Unpleasant Troubles.

AUTHORITIES agree that an excess of uric acid is primarily due to faulty kidney action. Retention of this toxic material often makes its presence felt by sore, painful joints, a tired, languid feeling and, sometimes, toxic backache and headache. That the kidneys are not functioning right is often shown by scanty or burning passage of secretions. Thousands assist their kidneys at such times by the use of Doan's Pills—a stimulant diuretic. Doan's are recommended by many local people. Ask your neighbor!

FIRST to adopt DUCO

THE General Motors Research Laboratories cooperated with E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Company, Inc., in the development of Duco—an achievement ranking in importance with the invention of the self-starter.

DUCO is not only far more lasting than paint and varnish; it is finer, more beautiful and more economical to apply in factory production.

DUCO was first adopted by Oakland, and immediately thereafter by the rest of the General Motors cars.

BUYERS of General Motors cars have profited by the development of this finer, more enduring finish. Their cars wear well longer.

haute monde were once more going to cold-shoulder elaborate millinery in to the limbo of the demodee.

The Couture Decides.

Unconsciously the haute couture—the dress and coat creators of Paris—stepped into the breach and saved the day for ornate chapeaux, revealing, incidentally, one of the secrets of changing styles. In the present autumn openings elaboration has been the keynote of almost every showing. Severity, mannishness and all the rest of the garconne attributes have been scrupulously avoided in a collection of fall frocks, suits and coats which hark back to the gallant elegance of the mauve decade. In the face of this movement, strongly seconded by fashionable society from Deauville to the Lido, in Paris, in London and in New York, even so deeply rooted a custom as the cloche must be compelled to retreat. It is no mirage this time, and with the crisp days of autumn the madames of the mode, venturing blithely forth in fanciful frocks and elaborate coats, wear hats that synchronize with this sartorial elegance, whose charm is in a deft manipulation and intricate styling rather than in unalloyed boyish simplicity. Where in earlier seasons the anticloche crusade failed because the couturiers were not in sympathy, this autumn all the forces of fashion are marching in regal unison toward the new elegance, with millinery leading the way.
