BABY'S LIBRARY

BILLIE BROWNIE had gone again to call on Charles Norman. Charles Norman was now about a year old—well, he was a little more than a year old, and strange as it may seem he was collecting books.

he is all of four weeks younger. "Of course, I cry at times. Then my mother soothes me, but my daddy speaks to me sternly in a very man-like way. When I don't cry my daddy keeps calling me, 'You darling little thing,' over and over again.

"So that by way of variety and change and to have him say something else to me, I cry once in a while. That's one of my reasons, anyway. Another is that it is expected of me to cry just a little bit.

"But I don't cry much. It's a waste of time, and as I told you of all the other things I have to keep me busy, you will realize that I haven't much time in which to cry.

"I was going to tell you about my library. Well, as I told you at one time, I have any number of beautiful garments—just quantities of clothes. If it were not that I am so busy and that a baby would be out of place keeping a store, I really believe I'd set up a store and I'd have everything for customers with babies.

"But at the same time I don't need the money from a store, for I've got a bank account. Dear me, yes, Billie Brownie, I've a bank account!

"And then some one gave me a book. Well, my mother showed it to me and I grinned and made little 'talky sounds,' she said, and she also told me I'd been especially good after receiving it. She said books made people contented and happy and pleased.

"And she said I thanked the one who sent me the book by sending a 'friendly and gummy grin, much set waving and enthusiasm.' Yes, she said all this. I do love the way my mother expresses herself and talks. It's not just like every one else. It's always interesting.

"But I'll tell you, Billie Brownie, the book itself wasn't anything much. It gave my mother an idea, though, to start a library for me while I was young so I'd have quite a fine one when I grew up, and while growing up.

"So I have a library and quite a number of books now. When I'm a bigger boy I shall just have the best time in the world with my library.

"It is a good idea to start a library when one is only a baby. It gives one a good running start!

"And now I must bid you a polite good-by, Billie Brownie, and do come and call on me again soon. My grandfather is coming to call on me now and I must give him my entire attention—he is very important and learned and I'm a wee bit afraid of his importance."

So Billie Brownie went on in the best of spirits for he had had a chat with his dear little friend, Charles Norman.

At twenty-one: John Howard Lawson was creating more crooks to make his play fit for Broadway.

"AT TWENTY-ONE I sold my first play. Cohan and Harris were the buyers. When the production date for it came around it became evident that something had to be done to it to make it presentable for Broadway. For a long time we worked over it, putting in more crooks, more detectives, more heroes, more shots until the stage was reached when the opinion became unanimous that to leave the play alone would be the best policy. It has been left alone ever since.—JOHN HOWARD LAWSON."

TODAY: Mr. Lawson is one of the most discussed dramatists in this country. A few seasons ago his first play to reach Broadway, "Roger Bloomer," was produced and at once caused a flurry of agitated criticism, due to its total unconventionality. "Roger Bloomer" ran ten days on Broadway, then a band of intellectuals took it over to Greenwich village where it played ten weeks before it went into seclusion. Later it was published in book form.

Mr. Lawson's second play to be produced was "Processional." This work was given its debut by the Theatre guild and never was there so sharply divided or more violent criticism known in New York than that which greeted "Processional." Half the leading metropolitan critics said Mr. Lawson was a genius; the other half said something was wrong. One even questioned Mr. Lawson's reason. The audiences, too, were equally divided, but the outstanding fact was that those who liked "Processional" idealized it and lifted it to the highest pinnacle of art; while those who didn't like it hated it most decisively.

"Processional" was a play that told a story of the life of miners in West Virginia, but was set in a framework of jazz, thus striving to weld the inner drama of American life with the reckless flippancy and gaiety of the jazz years.

This is charming little Alice White in a scene from "The Sea Tiger." Miss White is a native of Paterson, N. J., but received her education in Roanoke college, Roanoke, Va. She has reddish-gold hair; she is petite and dainty. Her winsome face, generally wreathed in smiles, wins her friends immediately.

WHAT IS LIFE?

RIGHT living ranks first among the fine arts. But what is meant by the term life? The answer to this subtle and perplexing question has been the study of the ages. The interesting thing is that no person has as yet given a satisfactory definition of the word "life." Life is everywhere about us, yet we cannot see the thing itself. We only see its manifestations. Life is nearer to us than anything else in the world, and yet we cannot handle it. The most mysterious thing about it is that we cannot destroy it. Try however hard we will, we cannot destroy life. We might destroy the senses of touch, taste and hearing, and still that does not do away with life. We might to all appearances be dead, and yet death is only another form of life, for the body only passes off into other forms of existence.

While it is impossible to either explain, define or destroy life, we do know something of its origin. Life can only come from life. The rock is dead because it has no environment to which it is subject. It cannot communicate with the life that is about it. The tree, on the other hand, lives because it can come in contact with the world of nature that lies about it. It receives the necessary requisites for its life from the sun, the atmosphere and the soil. The bird rises still higher, because it can communicate with a larger environment. It possesses a life of consciousness. It has a world of its own. Man rises still higher because he has the capacities of a larger correspondence. The more perfect the correspondence the more perfect the life.

Life is also a wonderful development and the most important development element is motive. If life has no definite and dominating purpose it will be very dull and dreary. If an all-controlling motive and a determining purpose make life effective, in terms of service to humanity, we shall have something to take away with us from this world when we die. And yet life itself courses through the realm of thought without a definition. We do not know what it is.
