QUALITY CONTROL OF MILK.

the high counts people were led to believe it had. For the next three weeks the farmers used the three essentials namely: sterile pails, clean, washed udders, and small-top milk pails. The bacteria counts of the six farms were as follows: 19637, 4656, 3606, 1962, 2150 and 3025. On every farm the count was lowered to a very low figure and with one exception had counts which could pass the certified milk count which is 10,000 bacteria or less. Needless to say, the farmers continued to use the three factors and told their friends about it, too.

Farmers in the New York milk shed should not be confused in regard to the use of the small-top and open-top milk pails. The present regulations regarding the use of open pails came about because farmers were not washing the small top pails perfectly clean. If small-top pails are washed absolutely clean and at least scalded, their use will undoubtedly be permitted.

Unfortunately the production of a low count milk is only half the battle; the low count milk must also be cared for to keep it low. Milk is not only man's most perfect food but it is also a good food for bacteria. To stop milk from souring it is necessary to stop the bacteria in the milk from growing. This can only be done by one practical method means and that is the use of cold temperature. Milk must be cooled to below 50 degrees F. if possible. If two samples of the same milk are taken and one cooled at 50 deg. F., the other to 68 deg. F., and bacteria counts taken at regular intervals, the results are amazing. At the end of six hours if the initial count of both samples was only 10 they would then become 12 for the first and 17 for the second. At the end of 12 hours the 50 deg. milk would have grown to 15 and the 68 deg. milk to 242; at the end of 24 hours the 50 deg. milk would be 41 and the 68 deg. milk 61,250, and at the end of 48 hours, the limit of time for milk to get to the big city, the 50 deg. milk would only be 62 while the 68 deg. milk would have grown to the enormous figure of 3,574,000. The larger the initial count the worse it gets. Imagine milk of an initial or first count of 87,000 standing at 68 deg. F. for 12 hours. If you wish to know how high the count would be just multiply 87,000 by 242, then look at the answer. Does your milk stand at 68 deg. F. over night?

Spring Mills citizens got together on Monday evening and further discussed the question of fire protection. Dr. H. S. Braucht, acting chairman. After a discussion covering a wide range it was decided to appoint a committee to determine the character of a fire apparatus to be secured. In the meantime a subscription for funds for that purpose is being circulated, and to show their earnestness the house gave an almost one hundred per cent. pledge. The question of supplying the community with flowing water was for the present set aside.
