Asked to Advise Council!
The Bureau of fire protection sends us something like this:
"The newspapers of today are recognized as a most potent factor in moulding public opinion by suggesting means for improving of community interests and beneficial for the betterment of conditions. It is with this feeling that we solicit your cooperation in an effort for the conservation of life and property from loss by fire, through the columns of your publication in advocating the doctrine of Safety-First during Clean-Up Week, April 14th to 20th."
"Advise council of the desirability of erecting an ordinance giving the chief of the fire department authority to order the removal of fire menacing conditions, enforcing such orders by action under summary proceeding with a penalty of a fine or imprisonment in the event of non-compliance."
"Advise council to enact an ordinance forbidding the burning of rubbish, trash, waste or leaves in yards, streets, or alleys, unless the same be destroyed in an improved waste burner of iron, brick or cement, so arranged as to prevent the emission of sparks."
"Advise the substitution of carelessness for carelessness, neglect and indifference, which is responsible for 80 per cent of fire-waste."

This has been done faithfully for almost thirty years by this paper. The efforts have not been entirely lost, for where once it was the common practice to build fires on the street and almost anywhere else regardless of the hazard, the lighting of such fires now is the exception. The strange part of all this is that these safety measures are regularly violated by the persons who should aim to enforce them. Reference is made to local officials, such as members of the council, justices of the peace, etc. For more than twenty-five years not a season passed that one or more of the town officials did not grossly violate these rules, most of which are embodied in borough ordinances.

D. W. Collins, an auto salesman for the State College Motor Company, while on the road between Pleasant Gap and Lemont, lost control of the car he was driving and wrecked it to the amount of $400. He reported to his employers that the car, which had been loaned to him by them, had been stolen. He was arrested and brought before Justice Tressel, at Pleasant Gap, and when confronted by a witness acknowledged the truth. Collins was committed to jail in default of $500 bail.
