The Forestry department anticipates a distribution of 8,000,000 trees during the spring months for reforestation. The trees may be had upon application at the rate of $2.00 per thousand. Planted in squares of six feet, it will require two thousand trees to plant an acre.

T. A. Hosterman R. M. Smith, I. M. Arney, W. A. Odenkirk, Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Potter, Mr. and Mrs. E. M. Miller, Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Boggs and Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Bradford, all of town, attended meetings of the consistency, F. and A. M., Williamsport, during last week.

Seniors of the Centre Hall High school are sponsoring a play, "Aunt Jerusha On the Warpath," to be presented by the Senior class of the Highburgers High school in Gange hall, Centre Hall, Saturday, January 31, at 8 p. m. The admission is 25c and 15c.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward Foreman, of Youngstown, Ohio, drove to Centre Hall where they were guests of Mr. and Mrs. F. V. Goodhart. The trip was made primarily to visit the former's brother, J. W. Foreman, who had been seriously ill at his home in the Farmers Mills district, but is now apparently recovering.

At the time Clay W. Reesman, director of public property, Camden, N. J., became grandpa, he was sick, abed, but, nevertheless, proud and happy. A daughter was born to his eldest daughter (Mary) Mrs. Warner, in Philadelphia, on Monday, the 19th inst. The girl, upon her arrival, weighed seven pounds. Another bit of news is that Miss Lenora Foust, R. N., is the nurse in charge of Mr. Reesman.

From a report brought here by W. E. Lee, of the Potters Mills hotel, a second survey of the proposed new concrete road from the Mifflin-Centre county line to Potters Mills is being made. The changes south of Brownie's place are slight, but between the Shamokin club house and log cabin the route varies considerably from that first surveyed. The mountain north of the Shamokin club house will be crossed farther to the east, as will also the mountain back of "Brownie's." This route will leave "Brownie" to the west of the proposed road, but much below the road level.

A slight accident in which a boy of nine years was slightly injured occurred at the foot of Nittany mountain a few evenings ago. The lad was James Callahan, son of Hugh Callahan, who lives close to where the accident happened. The boy was walking up the concrete road on the right side and when the Walker mail truck, going in the same direction passed him, he cut across the road back of it, right in front of a car coming down the mountain, driven by Gene Lee, a clerk in the First National bank, Spring Mills. It was impossible for Mr. Lee to avoid hitting him and knocking him to the ground. One of the car wheels is said to have passed over him, but his injuries were slight. Mr. Lee picked up the boy and took him to the office of Dr. Morrow, where he was thoroughly examined after dressing a cut on the lip.

Superman

Private Banks had been the most bashful and retiring little man in the army. When women visited the camp he had always fled for shelter and stayed out of sight until after they had gone. So it came as a surprise when one of his former companions ran across him in civilian garb and accompanied by a large, robust girl, whom he introduced as Mrs. Banks.

When he was able to get Banks aside he asked him how he had met his wife.

"Well," replied the little man, meekly, "it was this way: I never did exactly meet her. She just kind of overtook me."—Youth's Companion.

Disappointed

"Aunt Hannah bailed from the Middle West, and had never seen the sea. Her nephew, who was doing well in the East, invited her to spend a month at his Asbury Park cottage. She accepted the invitation, of course.

"Well, as soon as she arrived, her nephew took her down to the boardwalk and showed her the boundless ocean, with its white foam and crashing breakers and fresh, salt-laden winds.

"There!" he said. "There, Aunt Hannah, is the Atlantic. What do you think of it?"

"Humph," said Aunt Hannah, "I thought it was larger."

TELEPHONING FROM AN AIRPLANE

The above etching illustrates how two-way communication is established between a person in an airplane and a telephone subscriber on land. The message from the airplane is picked up by the transmitting station (left) placed on telephone wires, and speeded to the telephone of the distant subscriber.

Reporters in Plane Telephone To Offices Many Miles Away

Bell Laboratories' Engineers Supervise Successful Tests Conducted Over Hadley Field; Method Acclaimed by Aviators

Aviators throughout the country are acclaiming the development of a new form of radio-telephony, which enables a flier while aloft to establish and maintain two-way communication with telephone subscribers on land.

A group of newspaper reporters and telephone experts recently tested the radio-telephone equipment while flying over Hadley Field, N. J., and successfully established contact with telephones located as far as 25 to 30 miles distant.

The tests were conducted under the supervision of engineers from the Bell Telephone Laboratories, New York, and the Western Electric Company, who have perfected the equipment which makes possible this ingenious new method of communication.

For several hours, through adverse weather conditions, calls were put through the transmitting apparatus in the airplane for telephone subscribers on land. In each instance the desired number was quickly obtained and communication established. Special devices prevent the conversations from being marred by the noise of the airplane motor or other disturbing sounds.

The receiving of conversations in an airplane is made possible through the amplification of signals picked up by a four-foot aerial mast connected to a specially built four-tube receiver. A generator propelled by the wind and attached to one of the struts on the plane, produces power to operate the receiving apparatus. For transmission purposes, a 50-watt set, connected to a trailing wire antenna 40 feet long, is used. Power for transmission of the voice is provided by a generator geared to the airplane motor.

The signals sent from the plane over Hadley Field were picked up at Whippany, N. J., in the Bell Laboratories testing station, and sent over telephone wires from that point.
