SEES DIVIDED LEADERSHIP; PERIL; VISIONS; BROADER OUTLOOK

"The fact that if Roosevelt is elected, with the Democratic party controlling Congress, the Executive will have full and undivided Government responsibility. Under existing political conditions, even if Mr. Hoover is elected, there almost certainly will be not only a Democratic House, but a Democratic Senate. Such divided responsibility in the face of conditions crying aloud for effective and constructive leadership would be a public calamity.

"The reasons above mentioned are each important, but the fundamental underlying reason why the election of Roosevelt is important is the difference between his background and outlook and that of President Hoover. By his speeches Roosevelt has shown himself to the public for what the history of his public acts prove him to be—a broad-minded Progressive. His position on important public questions and his acts as an executive are influenced by a knowledge and sympathy with all causes and economic groups. For many years this country has been governed by persons whose outlook is to a great extent limited by reactions and points of view of persons dealing in money or operating large enterprise. "That the opinions of this group are entitled to consideration only the demagogue would deny. It is the over-emphasis, almost the excessive emphasis, on the wisdom of their advice which has produced the chief mistake of the present Administration. How else can one account for President Hoover's delusion month after month that prosperity was just around the corner? How else can we account for his insistence a year ago that it was not necessary for the Federal Government to join with the States to help those who were about to starve? "The evil results of mistaken public action are not mitigated by the good intentions of those responsible. "What we need and what apparently we are fortunately going to have is a President who, with a broader outlook and sympathies, will not make such mistakes. "The above expressions are those of William Draper Lewis, former dean of the University of Pennsylvania Law School and author of many legal works, as well as of "The Life of Theodore Roosevelt." He was one of the organizers of the Progressive Party in 1912 and was chairman of the platform committee.

FARM CALENDAR.

Timely Reminders from Pennsylvania State College School of Agriculture

Birds Require Air—

Laying birds need much fresh air. Poorly ventilated houses become damp. When the first cold nights come it may be well to close the houses more than usual. This may cause damp houses, if continued, but a few nights may not have much effect.

Order Forest Trees—

Seedlings should be ordered early from the Penna. Department of Forests and Waters before the supply for planting is exhausted. Trees now available are white pine, red pine, Scotch pine, pitch pine, Norway spruce, Japanese larch, black locust, white ash, black walnut, and tulip poplar. Ask your county agent what kinds will grow best on your idle acres.

Keeps Cows Comfortable—

It is best to leave cows in the fall pasture only long enough to eat the grass they want. Then they will be more comfortable in the barn than lying on the cold ground. Prevent reduced production and lost weight.

Bees Need Pure Food—

If the supply of winter food was gathered by the bees during a light honey flow in the fall or from fruit juices, there may be so much waste material in it that the bees will accumulate this in their bodies, causing them to burst with resulting death. Pure food is needed.
