Tornado Is Most Frequent Disaster; Causes Heavy Loss of Lives

What type of disaster occurs most frequently in the United States?

This question is answered from the relief annals of the American Red Cross which show over a period of years that the tornado, or cyclone as it is called in some sections, is the most frequent and claims a heavy toll of life. It swoops almost without warning, and in the terrific whirlpool of its fierce winds it destroys all in its path.

The Red Cross gave relief in 44 tornadoes in eighteen states last year. The tornadoes killed 326 persons, injured 2,755 and the Red Cross gave aid to 21,738 who were homeless, injured or otherwise victims of the storms.

Toll of the Earthquake

When a severe earthquake killed 95 persons; injured 4,911 and destroyed several thousand homes in Southern California last March, the Red Cross was first upon the ground with emergency relief. It required more than three months for the Red Cross to restore the needy to a self-sustaining basis. The organization expended a relief fund of $411,000.

Historical Facts

[Under this head will appear one or more historical facts of local interest, to a large extent taken from Linn's History of Centre and Clinton counties, designated for reference as L. H., the figures following indicating page. The "Notes," if any, are those of the editor. The history was written in 1853.]

The prisoners were conveyed to the Great Island, where they arrived Sunday, July 2, 1820. Connelly died that night, and was buried near Great Island cemetery (Lock Haven). Peter Delsal was said to be the one whose bullet ended Connelly's life. David Lewis was conveyed to Bellefonte, where refusing to have his arm amputated, he died in jail on the 13th of July. His remains were taken to Milesburg for burial.

Another account says: It was conceded on the return of the party to Bellefonte that Peter Delsal wounded Connelly. Connelly was severely wounded in the groin, and could not be carried or transported over the rough roads. He was taken in a canoe by some of the party down the West Branch of the Susquehanna to the 'Big Island,' now Lock Haven, at the mouth of Bald Eagle Creek, where he died. Lewis languished for weeks and died in the Bellefonte jail. His arm was broken and the bone badly shattered. He was often solicited to have it amputated, and Dr. C. Curtin, a skillful surgeon, proposed to do so and save his life. Many advised him to submit to the operation, but he obstinately refused. Gangrene followed, and he died.

The writer of this account, who signed his name "Octogenarian," though young, often saw and talked with Lewis while in prison. He knew his brothers well. Caleb, a single man, who worked at Milesburg Forge, was a common laborer for Joseph Miles and Joseph Green, the proprietors of the works. Caleb was a very civil and harmless man. Also, Thomas Lewis, who at the time with his family lived in a stone house near Roopburg, then Billingsville, the stepmother. Thomas was a harmless citizen.

The stepmother of the Lewises, a Mrs. Leathers, who practiced midwifery, lived in a house near the "old red barn" (and now, 1853, the property of Seth H. Yocum, Esq.), on the turnpike northwest of Bellefonte. Many raids were made on that house by citizens before David Lewis was captured, supposing him to be there visiting his mother. But he was always appraised of their approach, as he kept videttes out, and always escaped leaving his warm trail to be examined by his pursuers who hotly chased him across Spring Creek, but sparsely clad, and up Sugar-Loaf Mountain. Lewis, when in prison and speaking of these "fox-hunts," often laughed about them.

David Lewis was a remarkable man. Very pleasant and agreeable in social conversation and manners, of fine figure and physique, his features regular and beautiful, quite an Adonis, about five feet ten and one-half inches in height, well proportioned, his arm tapering from his shoulders to the end of his fingers, his legs from the hips to the end of his toes, so that it was almost impossible to keep manacles upon him. He could slip all ordinary handcuffs over his hands with ease, also over his ankles. He was very agile and swift of foot. Had he pursued a different course of life he might have been a valuable citizen. Mild in disposition, he often restrained his companions in crime from excesses and murder. It is well said of him, it seems, "that he took from the rich and gave to the poor."

Connelly was vivacious, savage and vindictive. When the wagon containing the store goods for Hamond and Page were robbed and plundered on the Seven Mountains, the party consisted of Lewis, Connelly, and a small man named Jeffries, whom Lewis said was an expert, a perfect ferret and weasel.

About the time that Lewis arose from the midst of "the empty store boxes and rubbish" at the corner of Front and Market Streets, Harrisburg, where the wise men of the town met in council in the evenings to talk over and consult about the "affairs of the nation," of the risk men run in business on the highways an by-ways from robbers and cut-throats, and when "not the ghost," but the veritable highwayman and robber, David Lewis, rose up and exclaimed, "I am David Lewis, the robber, take me if you dare!" put the whole squad to flight. Lewis was looking for Dr. Peter Shoemaker, of Huntingdon, a rich iron master, on his return from Baltimore, and Harper's Ferry with a large sum of money, received for iron sold the United States for gun barrels.

FARM CALENDAR.

Timely Reminders from Pennsylvania State College School of Agriculture

BALANCED RATIONS PAY—In a comparison of balanced and unbalanced rations, cows receiving the former in an 18-week test gave an average of 10.65 ponds of milk a day per cow over the cows getting the unbalanced ration. At present prices the extra cost of the balanced ration would be 3 or 4 cents per cow each day.

CHEMICALS KILL WEEDS—Small patches of quack grass, Canada thistle, wild morning glory, horse nettle, and perennial sow thistle can be eradicated economically by the application of chemicals. Sodium chlorate is the most effective chemical for weed killing but must be handled carefully because of the fire hazard.

CONTROL PEACH DISEASE—Either lime-sulphur or Bordeaux mixture, applied in the fall, will control the fungus causing peach leaf curl. Bordeaux mixture, applied either in the fall or the spring, will reduce the amount of brown rot twig infection the following season.

PROMOTE RURAL HEALTH—While towns and cities have their general health requirements under the direction of paid employees, the farmer must shoulder his own responsibilities. This applies especially to an adequate supply of pure water and a safe sewage disposal system.

STORE WINTER VEGETABLES—Carrots, cabbage, beets, rutabagas, turnips, parsnips, squash, onions, celery, and endive can be stored successfully for winter use. Storing some vegetable raw each day increases the value and attractiveness of the meals.

SAVE FOREST SEEDS—With forest tree seeds in demand the farm income can be improved by gathering and selling this crop. Locust, walnut, yellow poplar, red, white and black oaks, white ash, and sugar maple are good hardwood species to gather, while white pine, red pine and Norway spruce are good evergreen varieties.

Goodness! What an Appetite!

If you are an average American citizen, you eat considerably more than your weight each year in wheat flour alone, according to latest available statistics of the U. S. Department of Commerce. By the time you have consumed 122 loaves of bread and several additional pounds of cake, pastries and biscuits, your yearly consumption of flour reaches the impressive total of 1606 pounds.

The average per capita consumption of cheese is 4.5 pounds, a small part of which is imported from Italy, Switzerland and France, although most of the cheese we eat is American made. Per capita consumption of butter is 17.92 pounds and, as in the case of cheese, it is almost entirely manufactured in the U. S.

One thing we do not produce for ourselves is coffee, our national beverage. It takes some 56 countries to furnish the world with its coffee. Columbia supplying us with the finest grades which are grown on the high slopes of the Andes Mountains. Altogether a total of approximately 1,500,000,000 pounds of coffee was shipped into U. S. ports last year providing over 12 pounds per capita.

Serves Under Five Presidents.

John Barton Payne, a retired judge and lawyer of international reputation, is serving his twelfth year as chairman of the American Red Cross. His service is without pay, and his appointment is by the President of the United States. He has served by appointment in high public office under five presidents—Wilson, Harding, Coolidge, Hoover and Roosevelt.
