Deaths

WILLIAMS.—A life span which reached over almost ninety years, all of it spent close to home, ended shortly after midnight Wednesday of last week, when Mrs. Jane Alice Williams, aged 89 years, 5 months and 3 days, passed away peacefully at her home in Lemont.

Mrs. Williams had not been well for several years and news of her death, while received with sorrow, was not a surprise to her many friends and acquaintances.

Funeral services were held from the Lemont home, in charge of the Rev. Botdorf, of the Lemont Methodist church, of which Mrs. Williams was a faithful member. She was a lifelong Methodist member in the Branch cemetery.

For 70 years Mrs. Williams made her home in Lemont, in the same house, going there in 1865 as the bride of Thomas Williams, who preceded her to the grave 38 years ago.

Of this union there were born five sons and one daughter, the latter, Mrs. Maude Longwell, dying in Philadelphia several years ago. The five surviving sons are Frank, of Centre Hall; Oscar, of Sinking Valley, and William, Charles and Boyd, of Lemont. A half-brother, David Johnston, and a half-sister, Mrs. Anna Miller, both of Altoona, also survive.

Mrs. Williams was born in Oak Hall on March 4, 1846, the daughter of Jacob and Mary Steel Johnstonbaugh.

STATE COLLEGE

Pennsylvania State College in the town of the same name. A striking air view of the famous institution and campus at the junction of U. S. Route 322 and Route 45, Centre county, not far from the geographical center of the Keystone State, in beautiful Nittany Valley amidst the Allegheny Plateaus.

[Editor's Note: This is one of a series of articles designed to stir interest in Pennsylvania's advantages to the tourist. Prepared under the direction of Warren Van Dyke, Secretary of Highways, this series aims to outline briefly many of the places and scenes which are being recognized by travelers from other states as outstanding items in itineraries of the United States.]

Criscrossed by the two main diagonal highways in the state and skirted by the William Penn Highway, Centre county, where State College is located, is one of the natural beauty spots in Pennsylvania. Nature and man attained an harmonious balance in this central mountainous area before the days of the automobile, and the extension of excellent roads throughout the county has not destroyed this feature.

The Lakes-to-Sea Highway, Route 322, enters Centre county from Erie at Philadelphia on the northwest and dips over the mountains to Lewisburg on the southeast where it taps the William Penn Highway and leads to Harrisburg and Philadelphia.

U. S. Highway 220 swings northwest from West Virginia through Bedford and Altoona to cross Centre county through the Bald Eagle valley on its way to Williamsport and northeastern Pennsylvania.

Throughout Centre county concrete highways and well-kept macadam roads sweep through broad valleys and wind up the sides of friendly mountains. State forests and good camping sites are within easy reach of hard roads, and good accommodations for travelers are available in the small towns and villages which dot the landscape.

The charm of the mountains pervade Centre county. Their magic is not limited to a single season, it persists throughout the year.

Not only has nature dealt with a generous hand in providing delights for the traveler in Centre county, but man has added his share to the attractions. In Bellefonte, the county seat, are to be found beautiful old colonial doorways and other examples of age-old architecture. The history of the little city itself goes back to the Revolutionary days. The name was bestowed by Talleyrand when he beheld the enormous spring in what is now the center of the city from which a small river issues. "La Belle Fontaine," he exclaimed, and Belle Fontaine, Bellefonte, the name became.

Governors, generals, senators, came to the service of the state from Bellefonte, and here resided the men who participated in establishing the Pennsylvania State College in almost the geographical center of the Commonwealth. The College is located some twelve miles from Bellefonte in the Nittany Valley, a broad, level plateau high in the mountains.

The Pennsylvania State College is an institution which has been virtually rebuilt in the past ten years. Its tradition of sound scholarship and generous service is old, but its buildings are new and modern.

The campus of the Pennsylvania State College is accounted one of the most beautiful in the United States. Marked out on a rolling ridge more than three-quarters of a century ago, generous provision was made for the College site, foresight which was amply justified by the expansion of buildings and equipment necessitated as the College grew from an enrollment of 119 to more than 5000 resident students. Since before the Civil War the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania has maintained at the Pennsylvania State College an institution of the highest character where the youth of the State may obtain higher education at a minimum of expense. Tuition is free at the College for boys and girls of Pennsylvania.

But the College and the county seat are only some of the points of historical interest in Centre county. Just outside the limits of State College borough is Centre Furnace, most westerly iron furnace of Colonial days. The furnace was instrumental in furnishing supplies to Washington's ill-equipped army. A few miles south of the College is Boalsburg where the first recorded instance of decorating the graves of all soldiers occurred on July 4, 1864. The custom developed into our national Memorial Day. To the north, in the queer sandy region called the Barrens, are the iron ore pits which supplied Colonial furnaces, and which were scenes of great industrial activity when young Andrew Carnegie came along to make his fortune in iron and steel. The home where he lived at the iron pits still stands in the Barrens. Over the mountains to the west is the tiny settlement by the name of McAlevey's Fort, the name surviving although the structure has long since disappeared. The old-time fortress was erected as an outpost against the Indians, and later became the stronghold and center of Shay's Rebellion.
