PEDESTRIANS AT FAULT.

The report of an analysis of accidents and factors contributing to them, made by the Department of Revenue, is highly interesting.
Eighty-four pedestrians were kiled and 752 injured in accidents on Pennsylvania streets and highways during the first quarter of the current year. Of the 836 pedestrians in these accidents, 78 were "apparently intoxicated," 80 were "confused," and 543 were "inattentive." Of the others, 22 had physical defects while 61 figured in accidents through obstruction of their view of traffic on the highway.
What were the pedestrians doing?
Well, 50 were crossing at intersections against the signal; 25 were crossing intersections diagonally; 172 were crossing between intersections; 145 were walking or playing in the street; 11 were riding or hitching on vehicles; 168 came from behind parked cars into traffic lanes; 34 were walking on rural roads with traffic.
Whatever they were doing, the most significant thing is that the Highway Patrol, after investigation of these accidents, reports that in over 75 per cent. of the cases the victims were intoxicated or "inattentive." The moral is obvious—be sober and keep your wits about you if you would avoid the pedestrian's role in such an accident.

terior of his home painted in white.
