THERE'S nothing funnier to a farmer than a city guy that tries to farm. The best joke in any farm neighborhood is the latest story anybody has to tell about some city fellow that don't know how to hitch up a horse or start a tractor going.

Down in Oklahoma they tell about a real smart town woman that had a lot of dough and decid she was going to do some fancy poultry farming. She was investigating around the neighborhood where she expected to start her farm. She was trying to get a little information on the sly, too. She asked a farmer how he could tell when it was time to gather the eggs, and how he knew where to look for them.

"Well," says the farmer, "I reckon that ain't so much trouble. You hear that hen out there in the weeds? She's cackling. That means she's laid an egg out there, and my daughter's starting out right now to find it."

"Huh!" says the town lady. "I guess I'll have it arranged much better on my poultry farm. I could never understand such hen as yours. I'm going to have mine crossed with parrot blood, so that they will come in and tell me when and where they lay their eggs."
