FARM CALENDAR.

Timely Reminders from Pennsylvania State College School of Agriculture

Vegetables Do Well—In extension garden demonstrations conducted throughout Pennsylvania this year, many varieties excelled in production of quality vegetables. Before ordering seed for the 1927 garden, ask your county agent about these results. Your garden should grow only the best.

Remove Fire Hazards—Farm fires cause a property loss of $100,000,000 annually in this country. There also is a great loss of life. Fire hazards should be removed and care exercised in daily operations to avoid these tremendous losses.

Take Care of Cows—Cows which are falling off in milk production and losing flesh are serving notice that more feed is needed. Exposure to the chilly winds and cold rains also helps to pull down milk yields and reduce profits in the herd.

Clean Up Garden—One of the best ways of preventing insects in the garden next year is to clean up all refuse in the garden this fall and burn it. Insects hibernates through the winter in trash which can easily be destroyed and thus cut down the infestation next year.

Poultrymen to Meet—The 16th annual poultry short course is scheduled for October 28 to 30. Twenty-three nationally known speakers will appear on the program. Copies of the program are available from the Poultry Husbandry Dept., State College.

The State Supreme Court on Monday ruled that the vote machines may be used in Pennsylvania in the forthcoming election regardless of the number of parties pre-empted in specific districts. The opinion was written by Chief Justice John P. Gephart.

54 BILLIONS FOR WORLD WAR; SIXTH DEFEATS DEPRESSION

Aside from setting ourselves straight with our American neighbors, we have made a substantial contribution toward relieving the desperation of nations in other parts of the world. We have said to those nations: "We are willing to do business with you if you do business with us." Through the reciprocal trade treaties put into effect by Secretary Hull, recent figures show that our buying and selling has increased more with the reciprocal treaty nations than with the others. When nations are prosperous, they are not interested in wars. It is therefore sound policy on the part of our government to do its share toward advancing international prosperity.

We have clamped down the lid on loans to nations at war. We gave away billions of dollars in 1917 and 1918. Up to date, the World War venture has cost us 54 billion dollars! That sum would have come in handy today for loans to farmers, for irrigation projects, for slum clearance, and for other constructive activities to defeat the depression. The neutrality law signed by President Roosevelt puts a stop to war loans that end up only by dragging us into a war and by losing a pile of our good money.

That neutrality law also set up a permanent Munitions Board in Washington. The munitions racketeers have got to tell the government where the munitions are going. If it is going where it will drag our nation into trouble, our government stops the shipment. And there can never be another Lusitania incident, for that same law tells an American citizen not to travel on the ships of nations at war. If he does, he does so at his own risk.

A rather interesting angle of the current Presidential campaign is that President Roosevelt has said that as between war and profits, the American people choose peace. It is not surprising therefore that the du Ponts, the munitions manufacturers, are not among his supporters in this election. During these past four years, the United States government, through taking the Marines out of Latin America, by closer cooperation with the American countries, by encouraging world trade and by writing new neutrality laws based on its investigation of the munitions manufacturers and bankers engaged in international financing, has given definite assurances to millions of mothers and wives, and to the sound business men who prefer the stable profits of peace to the risky profits of war, that our government at Washington is not interested in sharing other people's wars.
