LOCALS.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Hess and son, Neil, of Winfield, and Mr. and Mrs. Reuben Ricker, of Centre Hall were guests on Sunday of Mr. and Mrs. M. A. Burkholder.

Albert Emery, mail carrier and noted fisherman, on Saturday stepped into a hole in the poultry yard at his home, and badly sprained an ankle, necessitating using crutches to locomote. His brother, Isaiah, declared the accident was the result of stumbling over a trout. With the funeral man the affair is quite serious. It will require the reading of an X-ray machine to reveal the true conditions and the loss of service to Uncle Sam for an indefinite period.

Inexpensive, Flexible Lighting For A Modern Recreation Room

A combination of removable ceiling fixtures, wall brackets and portable indirect lamps, means abundant light for all occasions in the recreation room.

By Louise Brown

SPRING is ever the season of remodeling and refurbishing. This year, as your special spring project, why not turn some unused space in your home into a recreation or game room? Perhaps you have an attic room that can be put to this use—or perhaps with a little ingenuity, a bleak corner of the basement can be rejuvenated. Such a room is sure to mean lots of fun for members of the family and their friends.

Inexpensive wall board might panel the walls if they are unfinished, and furniture that has been retired from active life may be brought back into circulation with a coat of paint or cheerful new slip covers.

Lighting, which might be thought something of a problem, can be easily and inexpensively worked out in a manner similar to the one shown in the picture above.

At the card tables, totally indirect, three-light lamps, used in connection with the general illumination in the room, give the kind of light you need. There will be no harsh glare on cards or checker board—even the new craze, the pick-up-sticks game, is easy with such good light.

Notice the removable lighting over the ping pong table. The deep shades, with their 150-watt bulbs, are hung on hooks screwed in the ceiling, and their wires are plugged into the ceiling outlet. Such lighting can easily be adapted to any convenience outlet or socket. The ping pong ball bounces back and forth with the greatest of ease under such abundant light.

Then suppose someone says, "Let's dance!" The radio is turned on. The card tables and lamps are moved out of the way, the ping pong table folds up, and more quickly than it takes to tell it, the ceiling fixtures above the table are detached. This adds to the spacious appearance of the room. All the lighting that remains is that from the double indirect wall brackets in balanced pairs on the four sides of the room.

In such a room there's sure to be an amusing evening for every one—whether it be dancing, ping pong or games. And the quality of the lighting means an evening of eye comfort as well.
