Lighting The Garden To New Beauty

Lighting makes the garden pool a bit of cool delicate loveliness at night. The artificial lily pads used to light this pool are made of metal with the lamp bulb clamped underneath.

By Louise Brown
THE coming of night need not mean the end of beauty in the garden, for the clever use of some simple lighting arrangement awakens it to a magical loveliness. Even the most amateur gardener can figure out some way of dramatizing the garden with light. It need not take a great deal of equipment . . . you can use as much or as little as you please. And while garden lighting used to be a rather rare, expensive hobby—now there is so much inexpensive, easily assembled equipment available, that anyone can indulge in it.

A small flood light can be mounted on a tree to direct a spotlight on a pool, a piece of garden statuary or a special flower bed. The weatherproof lights you use at Christmas time can be strung through the shrubbery with charming effect. Small concealed spotlights can be placed here and there in a rock garden.

The wiring itself need present no difficult problem. Underground wiring is not necessary for a satisfactory installation. Heavy rubber waterproof cord may be purchased in convenient lengths and is not expensive. Such a wire will safely carry a connection from an outside outlet on the garage or house, or even out through a basement window.

Clever and artistic light ornaments may be made or purchased. The metal lily pad with a light concealed underneath floats on the water and is one of the loveliest and most popular ways of lighting a garden pool. Silhouettes of birds, flowers and squirrels that shield a light bulb may be placed along paths or in flower beds.

To give a subtly natural effect, the mechanics of the lighting and wiring should be concealed as much as possible. Be sure to use clear lights, not colored ones, for the latter will have a tendency to distort the true colors in the garden. And be sure that all connections are watertight.
