Comfortable Study Place Aids Homework

An attractive study lamp with a revolving globe of the world set in the base would please any boy for his own study desk. This lamp has the glass-diffusing bowl and is the right height to give a generous amount of soft, glareless light.

By Louise Brown

THOUGHTFUL, modern parents are realizing more and more how important it is for the children to have a comfortable, well-lighted place where they can read and study at home. If the children's eye-sight is good, they need plenty of light to safeguard them. And if their eyesight should already be defective (and it's surprising how eye defects develop after reaching school age) they need the benefits of good lighting even more.

A place of his own for study or play helps develop the child's character. Often his own bedroom can be fixed up attractively or an attic or basement room can easily and inexpensively be turned into a jolly sort of place where he can do his lessons and bring his friends to play.

A lamp and a table or desk of his own where he can work, adds to the child's pride of possession and sense of accomplishment, encourages good posture and lessens eyestrain and fatigue. He will have surprisingly better grades on homework and will be able to do his work quicker and with less effort.

The lamp selected for study is of the utmost importance. It may be a floor, table or wall model, but it should be one bearing the I. E. S. tag, which means that it has been designed and constructed to meet the specifications for good lighting as established by the Illuminating Engineering Society, a nationally known group of lighting men and eyesight specialists. The lamps are made in a variety of attractive designs that harmonize with any type or period of furnishings. And they are the proper height, with wide shade and an inner translucent bowl to generously distribute soft, glareless light over a wide area.

Household Tasks Need Hot Water

By Louise Brown

IN A recent talk, a well known home economist gave an amazing list of 150 common household tasks made easier by a continuous supply of hot water! To list just a few: Personal Hygiene—bathing, shaving, shampooing hair; Medicinal—drinking, gargling, sterilization, hot applications, hot water bottle; Sanitation—scrubbing, cleaning, washing dishes; Household—general laundry work, cooking, and so on. These are just the everyday things we do as a matter of course.

Every homemaker knows the handicap of trying to carry on the regular household routine without an adequate supply of hot water. Washday, for instance, probably makes the greatest demand on the hot water supply and, in many homes, morning showers are out of the question if there is to be enough hot water for the laundry. Plenty of hot water for daily baths is essential to the family's health and happiness. But in many a family there's a regular pitched battle every night as to who gets first turn in the bathroom—and a hot bath.

Baby's warm bath is part of his regular routine—and he certainly enjoys it! Plenty of hot water for daily baths for the whole family is just one of the many reasons for a dependable hot water system.

locate them in the basement. Some are square in design so that they somewhat resemble a tall broom cabinet and take up no more space. If you wish to play the basement as a game room or use the room, one of the new water heaters will be quite inconspicuous and out of the way.
