FARM CALENDAR.

Timely Reminders from Pennsylvania State College School of Agriculture

Cover Crop Valuable—The roots of a rye cover crop penetrate the garden soil thoroughly and deeply, even when the crop is turned under very early in the spring. These absorb unused nutrients and save them for the next year's vegetable crops.

Prevent Fruit Bruising—Every effort should be made to avoid bruising apples in the harvesting packing and storing operations. Fruit growers can save considerable loss by insisting upon careful handling all along the line. Penn State fruit specialists remind.

Produce Good Capons—Some excellent capons are produced by cross-breeding, report Penn State poultrymen. Popular crosses include Barred Rock—Rhode Island Red or New Hampshire, White Wyandotte—White Rock, Light Brahma—Plymouth Rock and Dark Cornish—New Hampshire.

Evergreens are Popular—Many home owners like evergreens for foundation plantings around the house, say Penn State ornamental horticulturists. The use of pines, firs and spruces, however, should be discouraged because they tend to outgrow their position rather quickly.

Prevent Soil Erosion—When grain is sown on the contour lines of a hillside the run-off of water is checked and soil erosion controlled. Penn State agronomists say that this is a simple, inexpensive practice that any farmer can use.

Improve Ewe Flock—Unprofitable ewes should be culled out of the farm flock. Good ewe lambs may be used as replacements in this improvement program. Penn State livestock specialists declare.

POTTERS MILLS

... and only one pair of eyes

Don't let youngsters strain their eyes under inadequate or glaring light.

See that every lamp they use for close work is an I. E. S. Better Sight Lamp. This efficient, scientifically designed lamp permits comfortable, easy seeing. It prevents harmful glare and reduces eye strain.

When children see better, they study better, and do better at school. I. E. S. Lamps give you much more light than other lamps of equal wattage.

Visit your dealer's display. I. E. S. table models as low as $4.

Adequate light on close work, and freedom from irritating glare, are provided by the Illuminating Engineering Society's standards for I. E. S. Lamps.

Wide circle of adequate illumination assured by translucent filter bowl, wide shade—white inside, large enough bulb, and right height.
