How To Keep Cool In The Kitchen

A ventilating fan makes the kitchen a much pleasanter place in warm weather for it keeps the air moving, pushing out the stale air and strong food odors.

By LOUISE BROWN THESE stifling summer days it's a problem to keep cool anywhere—and especially in the kitchen. Of course, the simplest solution would just be to walk out, but that's usually impossible, so let's do the next best thing and make ourselves as comfortable as we can. Naturally you wear a light, cool house dress. But do you wear cool, comfortable shoes? Don't do like some housewives and wear old dress shoes around the house—hot, tired feet will make your kitchen tasks seem much harder. Do your kitchen work, including as much of the dinner preparation as possible, early in the morning in the coolest part of the day. Have a ventilating fan installed to create a breeze and carry off the stuffy air and food odors. If you are lucky enough to have an electrically equipped kitchen, you can be sure it's just about as cool as it can possibly be. When you cook with an electric range or roaster, the heat is controlled and directed into the cooking, and the insulation keeps it from escaping to heat up the kitchen. You can have oven or roaster meals anytime in summer without making the kitchen insufferably hot. Your refrigerator is a great comfort in summer, too. It supplies you with ice cubes for refreshing drinks, freezes desserts and salads, and allows you to prepare things well in advance, keeping them perfectly until you are ready to use them. If you have a dishwasher, of course that solves the hottest, nastiest task of all. If you don't have one, why spoil your dinner by jumping up from the table to plunge your hands in hot dish water? Stack the dishes until the cool of the evening—or even leave them until next morning when it's cooler and you have more energy. Put your mixer to work at all those beating jobs that tire your arms and get you all over-heated. In fact, let your equipment work for you all you possibly can—that's what it's for, and you'll stay much cooler.

FRANK FULLER, THE MAN TO BEAT IN THE BENDIX

Frank Fuller, wealthy west coast sportsman-pilot, is definitely the man to watch in the 1938 Bendix Transcontinental Trophy Race, feature long distance racing event of National Air Races, Cleveland, Sept. 3, 4 and 5. Last year Fuller, with little or no previous experience in long distance racing, and at the controls of a brand new ship, literally flew away with the event. He set two new Bendix records, Los Angeles to Cleveland and Los Angeles to Bendix, N. J., and in the process won himself $13,000 in prize money, against the toughest racing competition it is possible to assemble in this country.

This year the Bendix route is again Los Angeles to Cleveland, finishing at Cleveland Airport as the opening day feature of the 1938 National Air Race program Sept. 3, 4, and 5. Fuller is now air-wise. He knows the route. He has put in many flying hours since his 1937 triumph and knows just what his fast Sevsky racer will do. Where he was an unknown quantity last year, in 1938 he is the man to beat. But Fuller will have to fly his heart out to win. The richest stake ever posted for a long distance air race, $30,000 in cash, will sharpen the competition to razor edge keenness. Such air aces as Col. Roscoe Turner, Earl Ortman, second to Fuller last year, and other top-flight speed pilots will be on Fuller's tail all the way. Jacqueline Cochran, the world's outstanding woman flyer, is having a new super-speed ship built specially for the event, and is in it to win.

The rules for the 1938 Bendix further add to Fuller's problems. This year any type of plane is eligible throwing the race open to fast, long distance transport planes and even powerful military type ships. Pilots may choose their own routes to take advantage of a varying weather, may fly non-stop or refuel enroute. Certainly Fuller's 1937 record of 258 miles per hour from Los Angeles to Cleveland cannot stand up against this combination.

Fuller, however, knows the calibre of his competition and will be ready for it. The battle will be fast and furious clear across the country with a possible blanket finish at Cleveland Airport promising another thriller for the big opening day crowd during the afternoon of Saturday, Sept. 3.
