Laughing Around the World With IRVIN S. COBB

The Patience of a Traveling Man By IRVIN S. COBB

THIS one used to be a classic around the newspaper offices. A reporter who was covering the hotel news for his paper, gathering up gossip of new arrivals and the like, returned to the shop with a story.

"One of them, an underwear salesman said the hot weather had put him almost out of business. He acted like he wanted to cry about it."

The other two listened to his complaint for a while. Then the second one said: "You've got no kick coming. Look at me, cheery and bright. I haven't made a sale since last February and yet here it is the middle of August."

"Rotary snow-ploughs." Up to this point the third fellow hadn't said a word. Now he spoke up: "The other two turned on him: 'What's your line?' they asked in chorus. 'Suspension bridges.'"
