A Kitchen Convenience

The little clock-watcher above is timing the mixer as it beats eggs for a sponge cake. When the time is up, a bell rings, and you go on with the next step in mixing the cake.

By LOUISE BROWN

THERE'S no need to be a clock-watcher when you have a handy little time clock in your kitchen to do the watching for you. There are a number of different models on the market—the one pictured above can be set for any time up to an hour. When the time's up, a bell rings to call you back to the kitchen and remind you of whatever task you were doing.

Such a clock has innumerable uses. While it doesn't take the place of a regular range time clock, which turns the heat on and off at set times, it will watch the time for you. Suppose you are baking a cake, and want to beat the eggs five minutes—you put them in the mixer, turn the switch to High, set the clock for five minutes—and go on about collecting the rest of your ingredients, greasing the cake pan, or any other job. When the five minutes are up, the alarm rings and you can continue with the next step in mixing the cake.

You can let the clock watch the baking time for you, too, so that you can go about your work in another part of the house and come back when the bell rings to take the cake out of the oven.

If the family is particular about the way eggs should be cooked, use the time-watcher to tell you when you have a three-minute egg, or a five-minute egg, according to taste.

operation where the temperature setting is to be changed after a certain time.

The clock can be used to time all sorts of appliances. For instance, you might want to make sure that you will turn the sun lamp or the heating pad off at the end of 15 or 30 minutes—or you might want to be reminded to tune in on your favorite radio program in half an hour.

Mary's piano practice might be better, if she doesn't watch the clock, but knows the bell will ring when the hour is up, and tell her she can go out to play.

The timer is useful on wash-day, too. You can set it according to how long you want the washer to run, and go on with the dishwashing or dusting until the bell tells you it's time to take the clothes out.

BE SURE YOUR NEW RANGE HAS ALL THE Latest Improvements!

WHEN you buy a new range, don't be satisfied with one that is no better than the range you have now. Get an electric range—it not only has all the latest improvements, but it will also give you far more and better cooking service than any on the market.

The electric timer—to mention only one of the improvements—makes it possible to cook perfect meals automatically—without one bit of watching on your part.

You can put a complete meal—such as the one shown in the picture, consisting of a roast, potatoes, sliced turnips, cranberries and apple dumplings—into the cold electric oven hours ahead of the moment you want the cooking to start—set the timer and go away for the rest of the day. At precisely the right moment the electricity turns on, the cooking proceeds, and again at the right moment the electricity shuts off. When you return, there is a delicious, perfectly cooked meal, ready to serve.

★ Only the Electric Range has ALL the improvements.
