DEMOCRATS DINE AND HEAR TALK ON RUSSIA

One hundred ninety-one Democrats sat around the board at Nittany Lion Inn, Tuesday night. This was a Jefferson banquet, but not a word was heard of the first New Dealer to whom State Treasurer F. Clair Ross referred at a similar dinner as

"the founder of the Democratic Party nearly two centuries ago, identified himself by every word and action of his political philosophy as America's original New Dealer," preaching the now-familiar gospel of social and economic justice nearly 200 years before his modern counterpart, Franklin D. Roosevelt."

There are strange parallels in the careers of these two great Democrats, one the founder of our Party, the other the Moses who has led it from the wilderness of reaction back into the promised land of sound liberal concern for all men. Jefferson, despite his birth in a rich and aristocratic family, was a militant foe of all special privilege. So is Roosevelt.

The dinner, however, was favored by a highly illuminating, but non-political address, on the World Situation today by Dr. Carroll D. Chamblin of Penn State College. The forty-five minutes talk was directly on the subject, "How Important is Russia in the World Situation?" Summed up in a two-word conclusion the answer is—all important. The speaker was temperate through his talk and was listened to with rapt attention.

Following this, Henry Broeckerhoff, county chairman, aimed to impress the rank and file of the party that the defeat of last fall would but temporarily impede the aspirations of the party in the State, and that straws already indicate no Republican harmony in the State district or county. The chairman very emphatically proclaimed that the county committee would in no way use its influence for the benefit of any candidate for county office at the September primary and that it would wholeheartedly support the ticket named at the November election.
